ROOSEVELT MEN WIN IN SENATE TEST ON MONEY

Amendment Beaten by 36-54 Vote.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—President Roosevelt's supporters won their first and perhaps most crucial test vote on the administration money bill tonight, but faced another on a silver purchase amendment as the measure rolled slowly but confidently through the senate on its way to certain passage.

The administration adherents were able to produce a comfortable majority when the first trial came up on an amendment which would have taken control over the two billion dollar stabilization fund created by the bill from the secretary of the treasury and placed it in the hands of a board of five. President Roosevelt had made plain his wishes that the amendment be defeated and exclusive authority be left with Secretary Morgenthau. Fifty Democrats, three radical Republicans, and the single Farmer-Labor member proceeded to carry out the President's wishes. Despite the defection of seven Democrats to the side favoring board control the amendment lost, 36 to 54.

All Doubt Removed.

The result of the vote removed any lingering doubt as to complete administration dominance in the Senate. The amendment transferring from an individual to a board the authority over the huge fund, with all its powers and implications, had support not only from those opposed to the entire bill but from several who doubtless will vote for the bill itself on final passage. In similar decisive fashion other amendments opposed by the administration were voted down, and as a final show of confident control Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas proposed a limitation on debate, beginning tomorrow afternoon. The proposal was met at first by Republican objections, but a threat of a night session finally quelled the dissenters.

Included in the agreement was a decision to vote early tomorrow on the silver purchase amendment introduced just before today's adjournment by Senator Burton K. Wheeler [Dem., Mont.]. With the President opposed to the inclusion of silver in the revision of the monetary policy at this time, the Wheeler proposal is certain of failure. It will be regarded, nevertheless, as a trial of the strength of the more ardent inflationists who seek to expand the currency by silver remonetization.

Calls for Monthly Buying.

The Wheeler plan is to require the secretary of the treasury to purchase silver at the rate of not less than 50 million ounces a month until he has acquired one billion ounces, or until the value of silver reaches a ratio of 16 to 1 with that of gold. Against silver so purchased the treasury would issue silver certificates.

In addition to the significant balloting the day's session saw another vehement—and fruitless—Republican attack upon the whole principle of the bill, with its proposal to devalue the dollar, centralize the country's monetary gold in the treasury, and set up the stabilization fund with which to battle foreign nations in the world's exchange markets.

Senator David A. Reed of Pennsylvania was the Republican champion. He assailed the bill's proposal to deal in the government securities market, using that portion of the stabilization fund not required in foreign exchange operations. It meant, he said, pegging the price of government bonds in order to lead buyers to believe they were worth more than their true value.

"When bankers do such a thing," he said, "we cry, 'Jail them!'"

Makes Attack on Secrecy.

He likened the proposal to keep the administration of the stabilization fund secret to the practice of George III. of England in insisting on huge secret appropriations. Directing his words significantly toward the Democratic side of the senate, the Pennsylvania senator said:

"George III. used the great majority which he had in the British parliament to club through those appropriations. We still look back to his time as the low water mark in parliamentary government in the English speaking world."

Or if a more modern illustration were desired, he suggested, the senators might regard the expenditure of civil works money "already rotten with graft and corruption."

He was positive, he said, that the proposal to seize federal reserve bank gold and pay for it with debased gold

VICTIM POINTS OUT KIDNAPERS IN COURT DRAMA

Touhy Identified as Gang Leader.

BY WILLARD EDWARDS.

Three times yesterday John Factor, wealthy speculator, stepped down from the witness stand in Judge Michael Feinberg's court and confronted the four Touhy gangsters who are charged with kidnaping him.

The first time he pointed at Gustav Schaefer as one of the armed men who abducted him last July 1 near the Dells roadhouse in Dempster street, Morton Grove.

The second time he identified Albert Kator as one of the kidnapers who had threatened to torture him.

Identifies Roger Touhy.

And the dramatic peak of the trial was reached when Factor descended from the witness stand the third time and positively identified Roger Touhy as the leader of the kidnaping band.

The fourth defendant, Edward McFadden, was not mentioned in Factor's testimony.

It was a tale of terror narrated by the stocky promoter who rose to riches from an obscure beginning on Chicago's west side. As he recalled the twelve days during which he was confined by the kidnapers and subjected to every kind of abuse his voice broke more than once and his eyes filled with tears.

His Face Is Grim.

But his face was grim, his eyes cold and his forefinger steady when he pointed it unwaveringly at each of the three gangsters and said in turn of each: "That is one of the men who kidnaped me."

As a result of his testimony, which was not shaken under a lashing cross-examination, the state's hopes rose high for obtaining a death penalty for three, at least, of the defendants.

Factor's narrative was of the type which might be found in a sensational detective story magazine. Amid the breathlessness of the crowded courtroom he described his suffering under the threats of torture and death while the ransom negotiations were in progress.

Defies Gang Threats.

His identification of the three gangsters was given despite a number of threats that the family would be harmed if he named any of the Touhys in court. Fifteen squads of police were in and about the courtroom to guard against any attempts to injure Factor or rescue the defendants.

The identification of Touhy was the climax of the session. Throughout his long story Factor had continually referred to "The Voice," which was apparently that of the leader of the kidnaping gang. Factor was blindfolded and could not see the man who was talking to him.

Threats of "The Voice."

It was "The Voice" who first demanded $500,000 and later $200,000. It was "The Voice" who cursed him, threatened to blow out his brains or burn his feet. It was "The Voice" who informed him he would probably be killed even if a ransom were paid for him.

As these continual references to "The Voice" continued the curiosity of the courtroom crowd became almost frantic as it speculated concerning the identity of the gangster.

Factor almost sobbed as he recalled one conversation between himself and "The Voice" in which he cried out despairingly to his Maker and "The Voice" responded sneeringly:

"What are you praying to God for? Your life belongs to me?"

Discovers Who Voice Is.

Then came Factor's opportunity to discover who "The Voice" might be, he testified. The bandages were removed from his eyes in order that he might write a letter to his wife. He glanced up quickly, he said, and had a good look at the owner of the "voice."

"Do you see that man in the courtroom now?" Prosecutor Wilbert Crowley asked him.

"I do," said Factor, and he walked from the stand, stood before Roger Touhy and pointed at him.

"That is the man with the voice," he said firmly while a great sigh went up from the crowd.

Touhy stared boldly back at his accuser. The two stood for a moment, their glances fixed upon each other. Then Factor turned and went slowly back to the witness chair.

He had previously testified that he recognized Schaefer as one of the men

FLIES OUT TO SEA, BRINGS INJURED MAN TO GOTHAM HOSPITAL

New York, Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Fighting a heavy wind and overcoming choppy seas, a coast guard plane today flew out over the ocean off Atlantic City and took a critically injured seaman from his South American bound ship.

Racing back to New York from the ship, the U. S. S. Esparta of the United Fruit Lines, the pilot, Commander G. H. Stuart, landed the injured man at Stapleton, S. I., at 4:30 p. m., 40 minutes after he had picked him up 20 miles off Atlantic City.

Unconscious and not expected to live, the victim, José Sicilo, fireman, of Brooklyn, was rushed to Marine hospital at Clifton, S. I.

Sicilo was injured about 1:30 p. m. when he fell down an engine room ladder. Officers wirelessed a request to the coast guard to come for the man.

Poland Signs Peace Treaty with Germany

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—The 1,000 year old feud between Germany and Poland seemed ended today when the governments of Chancellor Hitler and Marshal Pilsudski signed a ten year pact "of understanding to fortify peace in Europe in the sense of the Kellogg nonaggression pact." The treaty stipulates that under no conditions is force to be used in relations between these countries in the next ten years. Consequently the pact is more than a nonaggression pact.

It was signed in Berlin by Joseph Lipski, Poland's minister to Germany, and Baron Konstantin von Neurath, Hitler's foreign minister. The pact is to be ratified and the documents of ratification exchanged at Warsaw. The treaty goes into effect on the day of ratification. It can be cancelled six months before expiration and automatically renewed for periods of six months until cancellation.

Diplomats Were Skeptical.

The negotiations were started by Chancellor Hitler and Minister Lipski last November. In view of repeated reports of the danger of a Polish-German war and a number of points of conflict poisoning the relations of both countries, diplomats were skeptical a treaty of friendship would be concluded. The questions of the Polish corridor and Polish and German minorities has stirred resentment in the two nations ever since the Versailles treaty established Poland's independence.

German war chiefs had proclaimed an independent Poland when they took Polish territories from Russia in the world war. They combined the territories with part of the Polish provinces of Germany and Austria, thus preparing the ground for a German-Polish understanding.

The Russians assert they feel the German-Polish rapprochement is directed against them, but this is denied by both Warsaw and Berlin. It was recalled that Germany has a similar treaty with Russia.

"Germany and Poland agree to settle all questions, whatever they may be, arising between them through direct negotiations," said a joint Polish-German peace bulletin tonight. "Both governments agree that peace between them is a vital precondition for peace in Europe. They are determined to base their relations on the principles contained in the Kellogg pact, which both Germany and Poland signed.

World Pacts Not Affected.

"The international agreements of these nations entered into previously younger dog.

NEW YORK WAITERS' UNION CALLS STRIKE; ONLY FEW RESPOND

New York, Jan. 26.—[Special.]—A general strike, ordered by the Amalgamated Hotel and Restaurant Workers' union, a left wing organization, went into effect tonight when the union failed to receive a reply to the ultimatum demanding recognition, wage readjustments, and shorter hours.

Although union officials had said that 30,000 waiters, cooks, and kitchen workers were ready to respond to the strike call, a survey of hotels following the proclamation of the strike revealed that not more than several hundred had responded. Service in nearly all of the hotels appeared to be normal.

Proclamation of the strike was accompanied by a "mass demonstration" by the union around the Waldorf-Astoria hotel, and the New Weston, where strikes had previously been declared.

About 800 men and women, not all of them strikers, marched in the demonstration.

They sought to impress the diners inside and the workers on the job with the fact that a strike was in progress. Police made no effort to interfere.

Having shouted themselves hoarse, those participating finally departed.

do not affect the peaceful development of their mutual relations and are not touched by the present agreement. It does not refer to problems which, according to international right, are purely internal matters.

"Should conflicts arise which cannot be settled by direct negotiations Poland and Germany agree to seek a solution through other peaceful means existing for this purpose.

"This peace guarantee will make it easier for the governments to solve the political, economic and cultural problems facing them."

Entire State Relief Board Resigns CWA

In a sharp and sudden break with the federal Civil Works administration in Washington, members of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission last night tendered their wholesale resignation as CWA administrators for Illinois.

The action was taken as a protest against the appointment of Lieut. Col. Daniel I. Sultan, United States army engineer for the Illinois district, as CWA administrator in Cook county. He will assume his new duties on Monday, taking charge of projects involving millions of dollars and employing more than 100,000 men.

Rebuke to Bureaucracy.

The resignations represent the first serious internal disturbance in CWA work in the state and the first wholesale rebuke of federal bureaucracy by an entire state authority. For the present, CWA programs in Illinois will not be affected by the resignations since the commission will continue to function until a new administration is appointed by Washington. Furthermore, the status of the commission in administering state and federal relief is not affected.

Officials of the Illinois Emergency Relief commission have served as the CWA administrators for Illinois since last Nov. 10, on appointment of Federal Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, and since then have employed more than 200,000 men at gainful work throughout the state and expended millions of dollars.

IERC Functioned Alone.

Except for the immediate supervision of Howard O. Hunter, CWA field representative in charge of programs in six states, including Illinois, and the more remote control of Mr. Hopkins in Washington, the local organization has handled the federal projects without other direct federal supervision. Robert J. Dunham as chairman of the relief commission was titular CWA administrator in Illinois, with Frank D. Chase, as executive director. Mr. Chase also resigned.

Supervisor Hunter, advised of the resignations, said that the federal authorities in Washington were highly pleased with the commission's work. He said that Col. Sultan as county administrator would be subordinate to the state administrator. The colonel's appointment, he added, was not a slap at local CWA officials, it being in pursuance of a new government policy to place army engineers on CWA projects where possible.

There was nothing to indicate any differences between the Illinois group and the federal chiefs until yesterday when it became known that Col. Sultan had been selected as Cook county administrator. Earlier reports stated he would replace Director Chase. Within a few hours Mr. Dunham and other members of the relief commission met in special conference in their headquarters at 10 South La Salle street.

Send Protest Telegram.

A lengthy telegram was drafted, citing the commission's protest, and sent to Federal Administrator Hopkins. Briefly, it charged that the commission had not been consulted in the appointment of Col. Sultan, hinted that this was an affront to the ability of the commission and its own engineers, and stated bluntly that as a result the commission felt impelled to resign.

"Our commission begs to advise you," stated the telegram at one point, "that it takes this action [resigning] in protest of the implication contained in your appointment of Lieut. Col. Sultan that our commission and its agents functioning as civil works administrators are not only lacking in ability and integrity but also in the proper sense of obligation in the right and judicious administration of civil works in our state, and, in effect, informing us that the civil engineering profession of Illinois has not within its number the proper individual to

DILLINGER GANG FACING DEATH AS STATES ACT

BULLETIN.

Tucson, Ariz., Jan. 26.—(Special.)—A packet of 200 $5 bills found in the possession of John Dillinger, seized desperado, has been identified as part of the loot taken in a holdup of the First National bank of East Chicago, Ind. The identification was made by C. J. Endres, a department of justice agent.

Authorities of four states yesterday joined in a general jubilation and sent congratulations to the police of Tucson, Ariz., for the capture of John Dillinger and three of his henchmen. The depredations of this gang of bank robbers and killers had covered Indiana and reached into Ohio, Illinois, and Wisconsin, but the states with first claims on the prisoners are Ohio and Indiana, who want them on murder charges.

It appeared yesterday that there will be little dispute over the disposition of the captives. Authorities of Wisconsin were glad to renounce their claims in favor of the murder charges and officials of Ohio and Indiana agreed informally to divide them up.

Wanted as Police Slayer.

Indiana wants Dillinger for the killing of Policeman Patrick O'Malley in the holdup of the First National bank of East Chicago on Jan. 15. Ohio wants the other three men, Harry Pierpont, Russell Clark, and Charles Makley, for killing Sheriff Jess L. Sarber when they delivered Dillinger from the Lima, O., jail last Oct. 12. Both Indiana and Ohio have capital punishment, and under the laws of Indiana the death penalty is mandatory upon conviction of murder in the perpetration of a robbery.

Others of Gang at Large.

The Arizona capture leaves only three members of the original Dillinger gang, which included the leader and the ten escaped felons, still at large. These are John Hamilton, Joseph Burns and Joseph Fox. However, three other gangsters—Homer Van Meter, John Longbrake and John Vincent—have been associated with the Dillinger outfit and are being sought by the Chicago police.

Hamilton has been identified as the gunman who killed Police Sergeant William T. Shanley in an auto repair shop at 5320 Broadway last Dec. 14, and with Dillinger he was named in an indictment voted by the Lake county [Ind.] grand jury yesterday, charging first degree murder. This was for the killing of Policeman O'Malley.

Send Extradition Requests.

Extradition requests were forwarded to Tucson by Wisconsin, Ohio and Indiana, Wisconsin's being first to arrive. This request was based upon the $27,000 holdup of the American Bank and Trust company of Racine. Illinois made no application for the prisoners, for they have not been identified in any Illinois crimes.

Officials expressed certainty that the applications of Ohio or Indiana, of both of them, will be honored because murder charges always take precedence in extradition matters and because those states have capital punishment. Wisconsin does not. And there was no quarrel between the officials of Ohio and Indiana. Prosecutor Ernest Botkin of Allen county, Ohio, stated at Lima that he had been assured in telephone conversations with Indiana authorities that Ohio could have all the prisoners except Dillinger.

"We will gladly surrender all claims to Dillinger if they will give us the other three, for these three have been positively identified as the killers of Sheriff Sarber," said Prosecutor Botkin.

McNutt Praises Arizona Police.

Asked whether this arrangement would suit him, Gov. Paul V. McNutt of Indiana replied:

"I can't say officially just now, but there will be no trouble between George White and me." He referred to Gov. White of Ohio.

Gov. McNutt, who praised the splendid police work of the Tucson force, also expressed the opinion that there would be no difficulty in obtaining a speedy extradition of the prisoners. The Indiana state police sent a detail headed by Capt. Matt Leach to Tucson immediately upon learning of the capture.

Gov. White consulted Lima authorities and then announced that his state would be glad to let Indiana have Dillinger in exchange for the other three.

"Ohio joins with the rest of the middle west in complimenting the police of Tucson for their excellent work," he said.

Prosecutor Robert G. Estill of Lake county, who summoned the grand jury at Crown Point in special session yesterday for the indictment of Dillinger and Hamilton in the O'Malley murder case, said the extraditions would be greatly simplified and shortened by the fact that Dillinger is a parole violator and the others are escaped felons. In such cases the comity of states decrees that prisoners be delivered forthwith, he said.

Mr. Estill also explained that it would not be necessary, under the law, to take Dillinger's companions back to the state penitentiary to finish their terms before trying them on the murder charges.

"If they are convicted of murder they will be electrocuted or sentenced to life terms and these terms will come first," the prosecutor said. "However, we want Dillinger and Hamilton for the killing of Policeman O'Malley, for the death penalty is mandatory in cases of murder in the perpetration of a robbery. We have a perfect case against Dillinger and Hamilton, for half a dozen detectives witnessed the shooting of Policeman O'Malley."

Stege Praises Gang's Captors.

Supervising Captain John Stege, who has been in charge of a special Chicago police squad seeking the Dillinger gang, was among those who praised the courage and skill of the Tucson police.

"It was a marvelous job of police work and they deserve the compliments of the whole middle west," said Capt. Stege.

Capt. Stege said he believed Hamilton was somewhere near Chicago. He said the gangster was wounded in the last Chicago bank robbery.

In addition to the moves toward bringing Dillinger and the other men to speedy justice the state police of Indiana have warrants for their two women companions arrested in Tucson—Mary Kinder and Opal Long. They are charged with aiding and abetting prisoners to escape, in connection with the Michigan City prison delivery last September, and with harboring felons.

The Kinder woman, police say, helped to plan the prison break and then directed the successful flight of six of the ten fugitives to Indianapolis. There she induced Ralph Sarleli to give the men asylum in his home, five miles west of Indianapolis, according to the police.

Dillinger was also credited with aiding in the prison break, providing guns and ammunition. He was at liberty at the time, having been paroled after serving part of a robbery term.

Dillinger's Father Believed.

On his farm near Mooresville, Ind., the 72 year old father of Dillinger yesterday sobbed in relief that his desperado son was not killed. Since the jail delivery at Lima the old man had lived in constant fear that his son would be killed in a fight with policemen.

"I don't believe they have a thing on him in any of these killings," said the elder Dillinger.

The Arizona police will receive substantial rewards for the capture of the gang. The county commissioners at Lima offered $1,000 a man, dead or alive, for the perpetrators of the jail break; Indiana offered $100 a man for the return of the escaped felons, and rewards were posted by various banks raided by the outlaws. Altogether there was a price of $8,000 on the head of Dillinger alone, the police say.

The capture of Dillinger and his companions climaxes a reign of terror in which the desperadoes, armed with machine guns and protected by bullet proof vests, raided ten middle west banks, obtaining a quarter of a million dollars in loot, and killed four law enforcing officers. Besides Policemen O'Malley of East Chicago and Shanley of Chicago and Sheriff Sarber of Lima the bandits killed Policeman Eugene Teague of the Indiana state force.

List of Banks Robbed.

CENTRAL NATIONAL BANK, Green Castle, Ind., $24,000.
NEW CARLISLE [O.] BANK, $53,000.
AMERICAN BANK AND TRUST COMPANY, Racine, Wis., $27,000.
FARRELL [PA.] BANK, $24,000.
STATE BANK OF MASSACHUSETTS AVENUE, Indianapolis, $24,000.
FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF EAST CHICAGO, $20,000.
MONTPELIER [IND.] NATIONAL BANK, $12,000.
ST. MARY'S [O.] BANK, $10,795.
PAULDING [IND.] COMMERCIAL BANK, $3,500.
CLUTTON [O.] STATE BANK, $2,800.

Of the three bandits still at large, John Hamilton, slayer of Sergt. Shanley, is the most dangerous, according to the police, and he probably will inherit Dillinger's title of public enemy No. 1 unless his reputed wound has put him out of the picture.

Hamilton was the inside leader of the Indiana prison break and has been second in command of the Dillinger gang since. He killed Sergt. Shanley in the north side repair shop when he went there with a woman companion to get his automobile and found the policemen, who had been detailed to await their arrival, on the scene. Spraying machine gun bullets at other policemen who sought to capture them, Hamilton escaped, but the woman, Mrs. Elaine De Kant Dent, was captured.

Hamilton was serving a 25 year term for auto banditry in the Indiana prison, having been sent there on March 16, 1927. He is 40 years old, 5 feet 8¼ inches tall, and weighs about 180 pounds. Police readily recognize him because the middle and index fingers of his right hand are missing and he has a scar between his brows. He is also tattooed with a heart and his initials on the left forearm.

Born on Indiana Farm.

Hamilton was born on a farm in Indiana and his occupation, prior to his bandit career, was that of a carpenter. This was the job assigned to him in the penitentiary.

The Chicago police lack complete information concerning Joseph Fox and Joseph Burns, the other Dillinger outlaws remaining at liberty.

Something about the nature and intentions of Dillinger was learned by police from Edward Shouse, a former member of the gang who was captured recently at Paris, Ill. Shouse said Dillinger and the other gangsters were "kill crazy," that they had sworn to themselves never to be taken alive. That is why Chicago police had so much praise for the police of Tucson.

Dillinger had accumulated upward of $50,000 as his share of the bank loot and he planned to increase this to $100,000 and then flee to South America, according to Shouse.

DILLINGER HELD WITH 3 AIDS ON $100,000 BONDS

Four States Are Seeking Their Return.

Tucson, Ariz., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—John Dillinger, desperate leader of a band of outlaws which has terrorized Indiana and the Chicago area for months, and three of his henchmen were arraigned here today before Justice of the Peace C. V. Budiong and held in bonds of $100,000 each as fugitives from justice.

Dillinger and his pals, Charles Makley, Harry Pierpont, and Russell Clark, who had evaded a search that was maintained for them in the middle west since Sept. 25, were captured here last night by Tucson police. The four were seized separately and not one of them had an opportunity to fire a shot from the machine guns and other weapons they brought with them from Chicago.

Three Women Also Held.

Three women companions of the outlaws, who gave the names Anne Martin, Opal Long, and Bernice Thompson, were held in bonds of $5,000 each after they had been charged with obstructing justice.

A single touch of romantic gallantry was given the proceedings by the desperate Dillinger. At the end of the hearing, as all the prisoners were being taken from the courtroom, he smiled at Anne Martin. She smiled back. They were close together and Dillinger leaned over and kissed the girl.

Following the hearing the terrible Dillinger, who had notified the authorities he would "go the limit" to oppose extradition to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, or Wisconsin, states which want him for serious crimes, screamed his defiance to the guards who watched over him in a cell of the Pima county jail.

"You're framing me for crimes I never even read about," he shouted, shaking his fists. "You can't keep me in any two by four jail like this. I'll get out and kill you all."

He was asked if he was involved in the kidnaping of Edward Bremer in St. Paul.

"How could I do that job?" he cried. "I was in Chicago when it happened."

Governor Visits Prisoners.

Gov. B. B. Moeur of Arizona visited the jail this afternoon and viewed all the prisoners. Dillinger declined to talk to him, but Pierpont jokingly told the state's chief executive he was sorry to see him in jail. The governor retorted that he felt the same way about the whole gang.

Makley also talked freely, informing the governor that he thought he'd be out soon.

When the governor visited Anne Martin and asked her how she liked her temporary home she retorted:

Crowds Flock to See Gangsters.

When the court hearing was called in the Pima county courthouse this morning the largest crowd that ever displayed interest in a local crime event filled the corridors and overflowed the lawn and the adjoining streets. So great was the press in the courtroom that Magistrate Budlong ordered the aisles cleared, permitting only those who had seats to remain.

Before him, as exhibits of evidence, were the five baby machine guns that were seized with the outlaws.

The demeanor of the four men varied. Dillinger was surly and when his name was called refused to stand up, saying, "I ain't Dillinger." At the command of the magistrate he was yanked to his feet. Clark and Makley were silent.

Pierpont Plays Clown.

Pierpont, on the contrary, played the clown and kept up such a running fire of comment on the proceedings that at times he was forcibly quieted. When his own name was called he stood up and laughed.

"That must be me," he said.

A little later, when the name of Anne Martin was called, he exclaimed: "There ain't no such animal."

Another of the girls in custody, the one who gave the name of Thompson, is believed to be Mary Kinder, wanted on a charge of murder in Indiana.

The fugitive criminals have engaged John Van Buskirk, Los Angeles attorney, to defend them. He fought at the hearing to have the men remanded on bail smaller than the $100,000 set. Later he announced that he would file a writ of habeas corpus in behalf of the prisoners immediately. Following the lead of Dillinger, he advanced the claim the men were being framed and declared the fight against extradition would be carried on to the bitter end.

Scornful of Law's Charges.

Dillinger himself was scornful of the ability of policemen and law officers everywhere. He asserted that he had never done any of the crimes charged against him, but boasted that he had committed others they never knew about.

"I'm an expert in my business," he said. "I can play tag with the police any time. They just dodge around on old trails like fox hounds that don't know what's going on. And the dumbest ones in the world are the Chicago kind. Right now none of these smart alec coppers have got a bit of evidence that I killed anybody or robbed any bank."

Had Been in Florida.

County Attorney Clarence Houston said that he was sure Van Buskirk would endeavor to create as much delay as possible, as his clients figured they would have a good chance to escape if left in the jail here.

The criminals' attorney told Chief of Police C. A. Wollard, who led in the capture of the mob, that all of them had been in Jacksonville, Fla., for seven weeks before coming here and would prove it. This would let them out of any connection with alleged crimes committed after Dillinger was taken from the Lima, O., jail in a raid of Oct. 12.

Despite his boasts Dillinger slipped when he failed to follow an elementary procedure—reading the newspapers. The news of the capture of Clark and Makley was being cried by boys in the streets several hours before he was captured.

According to the police, he had been in Tucson only three days. Clark and Makley, however, came here on Jan. 9 and achieved a certain notoriety by flashing large bills in night clubs, associating with blues singers, and spending with the carefree jollity of intoxicated sailors.

Hotel Fire Their Undoing.

Their downfall, and the clew that resulted in the arrest of all, was a matter of pure chance, however. They had registered at the Congress hotel, which caught fire on Monday. While firemen were battling the flames the pair offered a bellboy $12 to carry out their trunks. The firemen saw guns in their room and later one of them found the pictures of the pair in a detective story magazine and notified the police.

Clark was captured in an apartment he later rented. He battled with a policeman who entered, and was attempting to shoot him when other officers arrived and beat him into submission with pistol butts. Makley was caught on the street a little later. Pierpont was attempting to drive away from a tourist camp, accompanied by the Kinder girl, when a policeman recognized him merely by the report that one member of the bandit band had a soft and pleasing voice.

A complete count of the money found in possession of the desperadoes showed a total of $36,000 in cash and jewelry valued at $13,500.

Four Seized in Raids on Shelton Gang Hangouts

Belleville, Ill., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Two men and two women were arrested in raids today on two houses described by Sheriff Jerome Munie as "hangouts" of the Shelton gang. The other "hide-out" was discovered at Millstadt, where a house in a five and a half acre plot was conducted under the name of the "Happy Hollow Dude Ranch."

POLICE ROUT BANDIT GANG; SHOOT ONE; FOUR OTHERS SEIZED

Bloomington, Ill., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—McLean county officers thwarted an attempted robbery and extortion plot early today, and as a result four men are under arrest and a fifth man is in a Bloomington hospital, wounded by police bullets.

Sheriff James Reeder of McLean county received a tip late yesterday afternoon that Raymond Gregson, a farmer living near Farmer City, was to be "put on the spot" for a sum of money supposed to have been kept at his home after he had sold 270 head of hogs recently.

The holdup had hardly progressed five minutes when the alarm was given. Three masked men dashed out, jumped into a car, and fled with the sheriff's posse in pursuit. They were arrested at Deland. The fourth man had been wounded before he reached the car. The fifth robber escaped in the darkness, but was later captured.

The wounded bandit is Guskey Wood, 22, of Piatt county. Those in the jail are Howard Wilson, 28; Harrison Clifton, 18, and Campbell Taylor, 54, all of Piatt county, and Hubert Richardson, 21, Deland.

On the persons of the robbers were found guns and pliers. The latter, Sheriff Reeder alleges, were to be used on the finger nails and toes of their intended victim if he did not expose the hiding place of the money.

TUCSON'S POLICE SHOW THEY CAN BEAT 'EM TO DRAW

More Expert with Guns Than Eastern Thugs.

BY ARTHUR SCHMON.
[President, Ontario Paper Company.]

Tucson, Ariz., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—The outstanding fact about the capture of John Dillinger and his desperate gang by the Tucson police is that the law enforcing officers here are better men with guns than the criminals from back east.

This is clearly shown by the manner of the surrender of the desperadoes. Although Russell Clark, Harry Pierpont, and Dillinger were all armed when the police approached, each surrendered without firing a shot. The policemen beat them to the draw.

Pierpont Receives a Surprise.

Pierpont was caught in his automobile with Mary Kinder, his sweetheart, by three young men, ex-cowboys, who had been on the Tucson force less than a year. Although the trio knew Pierpont to be a deadly man with a pistol they did not even trouble to search him. One man got in the car with him and rode down to police headquarters while the others followed nonchalantly on motorcycles.

It was not until questioning had been started in the station that Pierpont demonstrated he was armed. Thinking that none of the surrounding police was watching him, he reached for the .38 caliber Colt he carried in his belt. Before he had it halfway into shooting position five pistols were leveled at his eyes by his captors—and every one of the policemen could have shot out either of the eyes.

"Pull Too Fast for Us."

After Pierpont had been searched and two more pistols found, one under his arm and one in his right sock, he remarked ruefully:

"These cops out here ain't like the kind they have in Indiana. They pull too fast for us."

Chief of Police C. A. Wollard and Sheriff John Belton have complete confidence in the ability of their men to handle any sort of situation. But they know the reputation of the Dillinger gang as prison breakers and they are taking no chances of their escape.

Tonight 15 deputy sheriffs in tall cream colored hats are patrolling the jail, ready to take care of any attempt that other pals of the gangsters still at large may make for their release. Strangers are stopped near the jail and allowed to get close to it only when they demonstrate that their business is innocent. In doubtful cases Justice of the Peace C. V. Budlong or County Attorney Clarence Houston are asked to decide.

Dillinger Denied Meat, Food.

Both the justice and the prosecutor, former easterners who came here for their health—Budlong is a native of Wisconsin—are determined that the disposition to be made of the prisoners shall be that most likely to result in their getting justice. They are not interested in seeing them get mercy. The general opinion is that an amicable division of the gangsters between Ohio and Indiana will be arranged.

Until this matter is decided the Dillinger mob is in charge of Sheriff Belton. He is keeping a firm hand on them. Tonight Dillinger sent a message by a deputy sheriff that he'd like to have a little more food for supper.

"Tell him he had plenty," directed the sheriff. "We don't expect to keep that gang in luxury while they're with us."

CAPTURE OF GIRL LEADS TO BANK GANG CONFESSION

One of 2 'Aids' Admits Downstate Crimes.

Police led by Supervising Captain John Stege yesterday arrested Gladys Crawford, 28 years old, sweetheart of three successive gangs of bank robbers, and two male companions, one of whom confessed his participation in a series of downstate bank robberies.

Capt. Stege, with Lieut. Arthur Katt and a squad of police, arrested the Crawford woman and her two companions, Samuel Harper, 29 years old, and Marion Enser, said by police to be a Peoria safeblower, at Garfield boulevard and Western avenue. When he was questioned by Chief of Detectives Fred Montgomery of Peoria and T. P. Sullivan, head of the state bureau of criminal investigation, who furnished the information on which Capt. Stege acted, Harper confessed that he took part in the double bank robbery at Cullom, Ill., last June, as well as in later robberies at Eminston, Newman, and Laura, Ill. Other members of the gang have already been arrested at Peoria, where Harper and the others arrested here were taken early today.

Raid Alleged "Armory."

The arrests of the trio led to the discovery by police of an alleged gang armory in a bicycle and sporting goods store operated by Taman Brothers, at 4933 South Ashland avenue, where Capt. Stege said, it was possible for hoodlums to purchase machine guns and ammunition, silencers, bombs and other munitions. Through questioning Harper police learned that he had purchased a revolver from Benjamin Taman, one of the owners.

Taman, who, police asserted, has no license to operate as a gunsmith, was arrested and forty different weapons, a bulletproof vest, forty feet of fuse, a quantity of gun powder and a gun silencer were seized, together with Tamans' records.

Four Guns in Girl's Car.

Four revolvers were found in the car in which the Crawford woman and her companions were arrested. She denied that she owned any of the guns, but some ammunition was found in her purse and Montgomery said she had been known to use a gun during robberies. The trio came to Chicago Thursday from Fredericktown, O.

The Crawford woman first came to the attention of Chicago police in December, 1926, when she was arrested with the Corray gang, bank robbers from Champaign, Ill., who are now in the penitentiary. She was the sweetheart of Glenn Nichols, leader of the gang, and, after conviction in the local federal court, served 18 months in the federal women's penitentiary at Alderson, W. Va., for altering stolen Liberty bonds.

Shifts Her Affections.

After her release from the penitentiary she became an associate of Joseph Alexander, Louis Baggett, and Don Potter, who were arrested and now are serving federal penitentiary sentences, Montgomery said. She was more recently a sweetheart of George Slade, sought as a member of the kidnaping and bank robbing gang led by Theodore [Handsome Jack] Klutas, who was killed two weeks ago by Chicago detectives.

Harvey Jensen, 26 years old, 331 Swan street, a radio mechanic, and Harry Holmes, owner of a radio store at 5524 South Michigan avenue, were questioned by police in connection with the arrests of the Crawford woman, Harper, and Enser, but were later released. Police said Jensen and Holmes were not linked with the group.

HITS HIS WIFE'S EX-MATE; CITED FOR CONTEMPT

Judge Rudolph F. Desort of the Superior court yesterday ordered Harry A. Davis, an insurance broker living in the Shoreham hotel, 3818 Sheridan road, to show cause next Friday why he should not be held in contempt of court for an assault upon Harold Manasse, who was the first husband of the present Mrs. Davis.

Mrs. Davis in 1920 divorced Manasse, an official of the Outdoor Advertising company, and was awarded $70 a month for the support of their son, Harold Jr., now 10 years old. Yesterday Manasse and his attorney, Theodore F. Rosenfield, appeared before Judge Desort and obtained a reduction of the support order to $40 a month.

"I'm only too glad to contribute to the support of my child," Manasse told the court, "but I refuse to contribute to the support of his mother's second husband. I don't think my money is being used for the care of the boy."

Davis took exception to this statement after the hearing, and in the corridor outside the courtroom hit Manasse twice on the jaw. They were separated and taken before Judge Desort, who ordered the contempt hearing.

GEORGE COHAN WRITES BIRTHDAY SONG IN HONOR OF PRESIDENT

New York, Jan. 26.—[Special.]—George M. Cohan sang for the gentlemen of the press today the song he wrote in honor of President Franklin D. Roosevelt and which he will sing at the President's ball here Jan. 30 in celebration of the President's birthday. The chorus follows:

What a man! What a man!
What a man!
He's the man of men!
What a lucky day
Was his first birthday,
What a lucky day for the U. S. A.!
What a man! How he made the way!

Mr. Cohan followed the song, sung at his home, with the announcement that he would not publish it because that "wouldn't be in good taste."

"Publicity?" he said. "I've reached the age where they let me alone. I'm not news any more. Publicity won't help me or hurt me. I've never met the President, but everybody feels the same way about him."

ALL CHICAGO TO TAKE PART IN ROOSEVELT FETE

Chicago's plans for the city-wide observance of President Roosevelt's birthday next Tuesday went forward yesterday. Many business concerns and organizations were making plans to contribute funds through party benefits to the Georgia Warm Springs foundation, the charity for treatment and cure of infantile paralysis sufferers, which is sponsored by the President.

The Auditorium theater will be the scene of the main party on Tuesday night. Concert, stage, screen and radio stars will perform. Dr. Austin A. Hayden, president of the Chicago Medical society, will discuss infantile paralysis, and a radio broadcast of the President's message will be heard at 10:30 o'clock.

A portion of their dinner receipts on Tuesday night will be contributed to the foundation by many of the city's hotels. The largest parties outside the loop will be held by the Chicago, Illinois, and American Federation of Labor groups at the Aragon and Trianon ballrooms. Proceeds will go to the foundation fund.

Special dinner dances will be held by the Army and Navy club at the Lake Shore Athletic club, and by the Standard club, and the Covenant club.

Accuses Squires, Then Picks Wrong Defendant.

A dramatic scene was caused in the Criminal court of Judge Philip J. Finnegan yesterday morning when a nonunion tailor was called to the witness stand to testify for the state in the trial of 18 defendants charged with a racketeering conspiracy in connection with the cleaning and dyeing and other industries. The tailor is Harry Besserer, owner of a shop at 6040 Irving Park boulevard.

On direct examination Besserer testified that Dr. Benjamin Squires, University of Chicago professor and former czar of the cleaning and dyeing industry here, had presided at a union meeting where guns were openly displayed, and had scoffed at the tailor's suggestion that the police would protect him from violence.

But on cross-examination, when called upon to identify Dr. Squires in court, Besserer pointed out another defendant, James P. Gorman, president of the Retail Tailors' union, and admitted he did not know Dr. Squires by sight. But he stuck to his story that other union officials at the meeting had introduced Gorman as Dr. Squires.

Besserer, on direct examination, said the windows of his cut rate shop had been smashed twice and his advertising sign destroyed. The examination was conducted by Assistant State's Attorney Thomas Bugan.

Tells of Window Smashing.

Q.—Directing your attention to July, 1932, did anything unusual happen at your shop? A.—Sure did. I was advertising 79 cents a garment; the union scale was $1.25. They heaved a brick through my window, smashing the window and my sign.

The witness sighed at his recollection of the damage. Over the objection of defense counsel he was allowed to state that the sign cost $175.

"Same thing," came the response. "They smashed my window and sign. Same cost, too—$175."

Q.—And was the window fixed? A.—I called a glass company, but the union was picketing my shop; I could not get it fixed until I agreed to raise my price. The crew would come with the new plate glass, see the pickets, and drive away.

Goes to Union Meeting.

The prosecutor established that the witness, with wind and rain beating through his shattered windows, agreed to attend a meeting at union headquarters, 629 South Ashland avenue, to discuss the question of quitting his cut rate policy. He named Dr. Squires, Mr. Gorman, and Charles Goldstein, secretary of the union and also a defendant, as being there.

Q.—What was said? A.—Well, Goldstein said Squire [sic] whould make a speech. Squire got up and said my sign would have to come down. I said I didn't see it that way and mentioned the police. Squire said police protection had nothing to do with it—the police would never help me.

Q.—Did you see anything else? A.—Yes. Gorman moved over behind the desk in the room and pulled back the curtain. There sat three men with their coats pulled back to show their guns. Nothing was said—they just sat, and then Gorman let the curtain fall.

Judge Calls Recess.

The judge then declared a recess. The defendants hastened to the corridor, where Dr. Squires was heard telling his attorney, James G. McShane, that the witness must be lying, for he had never visited the Ashland avenue union headquarters in his life. The state heard of Dr. Squires' statement, and decided to risk a doubtful play with the witness before cross-examination started.

"Step down and point out these men—Goldstein, Gorman, and Squires," Prosecutor Bugan said, when court resumed.

With an assured smile, the tailor pointed to Goldstein. He made no error there. But his finger wavered and his eyes narrowed as Bugan urged him to indicate Gorman.

"Step down—go over and lay your hand on his shoulder." The prosecutor waved the witness toward the 18 defendants crowded around the defense table. The tailor's hand clinched tighter on the rail of the witness box. With a nervous smile, he shook his head.

"Come on down, don't be afraid," the prosecutor said, and the tailor stumbled out of the box, shambled over among the defendants in search of Gorman, and laid his hand on Al Boris, another defendant. Boris and Gorman arose, smiled benignly at the tailor, and bowed. He retreated to the witness box.

"Let the record show at least that the witness had identified the defendant Boris," demanded Bugan. Over the objection of the defense, it was so recorded.

Asked to Pick Out Squires.

The witness painfully scanned the faces of defendants again as he was cross-examined on his identification of Dr. Squires.

"That's him with the glasses," he said, indicating Gorman.

"Step out here, doctor," the professor's lawyer said, and Dr. Squires walked before the witness box.

"Never saw him before in my life," the witness conceded, studying Dr. Squires' face. "All I know is what Charlie Goldstein told me—that it was Dr. Squires."

Jacob Cohen, former part owner of the Bluebird cleaners, 1032 North California avenue, described how he lost his share of a $32,000 investment in the plant.

As early as 1921, when he first got control of the Bluebird plant, Cohen said, one of the defendants, Ben Abrams, president of the Inside Dye Workers' union, paid him a call in company with another union official, now dead. They demanded $2,500 from him under threat of calling a strike, he said, and he paid them $1,500.

Ten years later, in the summer of 1931, he continued, another defendant, Morris I. Kaplan, then counsel for the cleaners and dyers' institute, previously organized by Dr. Squires, summoned him to the Bismarck hotel, where he signed the Squires agreement to join the institute.

SUPERIOR COURT JUDGES, REFUSE TO O. K. PAY CUTS

12 Oppose Reduction; Ask Back Salary.

Twelve judges of the Superior court, including Denis E. Sullivan, acting chief justice, yesterday sent a letter to the county board in which they not only refused to accede to the 15 per cent pay cut which the board included in its 1934 budget, but also demanded payment of the salary deductions made by the county in 1932 and 1933, and pay for the two weeks' payless vacation of 1931.

The judges have the law on their side in the salary dispute. The constitution provides that no reduction shall be made in the salary of an elected official during his term of office. The cuts in the past were made with the consent of the judges, although this year the board did not ask that consent.

Only one of the six judges coming up for reelection this spring signed the demand for full pay. He was Walter P. Steffen. The others who signed were Judges Sullivan, Michael L. McKinley, James J. Kelly, Robert E. Gentzel, Harry A. Lewis, Charles A. Williams, William J. Lindsay, John P. McGoorty, Joseph B. David, Marcus Kavanagh and Oscar Hebel. Other judges of the court have not indicated their stand on the matter.

In demanding the payment of the deductions made in past years, the judges took the stand that they had not renounced the payments, but had only agreed that the payment of the 15 per cent be suspended for a time. The letter stated:

"We wrote you on Dec. 17, 1932, that inasmuch as you had appropriated only sufficient money to pay the judges but 85 per cent of the salary due them for the period commencing Dec. 1, 1931, and in view of the statement in your letter that the financial condition of the county did not justify at that time an appropriation for the full statutory amount due the judges, we were willing that payment of 15 per cent of our legal salary be suspended for a reasonable time.

"It was not our intention on Dec. 17, 1932, when we wrote you, nor is it our intention now, to surrender, donate or contribute any portion of our statutory salary."

T. C. SULLIVAN, UNDER INDICTMENT IN TNT CONSPIRACY, SEIZED

Thomas C. Sullivan, brother-in-law of the slain George (Red) Barker, was seized yesterday by state's attorney's police as he rode in an automobile with his wife and baby at 77th street and Constance avenue. Sullivan has been a fugitive since he was indicted with sixteen others on a charge of conspiracy in connection with the activities of the Trucking and Transportation exchange, racketeer organization, alleged to have exacted tribute of $500,000 yearly from Chicago business men. Sullivan, a business agent of local 731 of the Excavating and Shovel Teamsters' union, will be brought to trial with the other defendants now awaiting a trial date to be fixed. Sullivan was the lessee of the offices of the so-called Crime, Inc., 1 North La Salle street, which was raided by police on Nov. 1, 1932.

ORDER 2D BLOOD TRANSFUSION FOR MRS. C. M. CHAPIN

Thomasville, Ga., Jan. 26.—(AP)—A second blood transfusion was ordered late today for Mrs. Charles Merrill Chapin Jr., New York society woman, who was dangerously wounded in the abdomen yesterday when a shotgun accidentally discharged while she and a number of friends were hunting doves in the winter Chapin estate near here.

Surgeons attending Mrs. Chapin described her condition as "not as favorable as hoped."

With her husband and two guests from New York, Mrs. Chapin went to the Chapin estate for a dove hunt, and while Mr. Chapin and the guests were on the opposite side of the field, Mrs. Chapin sat on a stool. A Negro boy standing nearby heard the gun discharge and saw Mrs. Chapin slump to the ground. Mr. Chapin and the others ran to her assistance, and hurried her to the hospital.

Virtual Prisoner During Kidnap Hunt Aid.

William [Three Fingered Jack] White was virtually a prisoner in his apartment at 920 Wesley avenue, Oak Park, where he was shot and killed last Tuesday night, because members of the Touhy gang had been hunting him since last November. This was revealed yesterday by Melvin H. Purvis, head of the division of investigation of the department of justice in Chicago.

Purvis also declared that White had been cooperating with the federal agents of his division. He said that White had promised to aid his men in the government's hunt for kidnapers. Purvis added that White had aided in the search for one kidnaper who had been under the protection of Gus Winkler, north side beer and gambling head, who was slain three months ago.

Clear Two Agents.

Both these statements were made by the chief federal investigator during the afternoon. Purvis said he had investigated the activities of two of his agents who visited the White apartment a few hours before the murder, and had been convinced that they could have had no part in the killing.

The two agents were James T. Martin of Boston, Harvard graduate and a regular investigator, and Oliver Kempster, a state highway policeman assigned to the department of justice. Purvis said that Martin had been cleared of all guilt and would remain in the Chicago office. Kempster, while cleared, Purvis said, had been ordered to report to his commanding officer at Elgin, Ill.

Aided in Kidnap Hunt.

Kempster, according to Purvis, had enlisted White's help in finding an alleged kidnaper, one [Irish] O'Malley, who is sought by the government as one of the abductors of August Luer, the Alton, Ill., banker, who was ransomed last summer. Purvis said that White had informed the agents that O'Malley was being protected by Winkler and that he was in Chicago.

Purvis said that the four revolvers carried by his agents when they were questioned by Oak Park police on Wednesday morning, had been turned over to the coroner's office for ballistics tests and returned to him. He said that Chief Deputy Coroner Stephen Kolanowski had reported that the tests disclosed that the three bullets found in White's apartment could not have been fired from the agents' guns.

Take Fingerprints.

Meanwhile, the Oak Park police were still proceeding with the taking of fingerprints from glasses and bottles found in White's apartment. There were several hundred of these prints found, it was explained by Lieut. Harry Wilson and these now are being classified and examined. The lieutenant said that he had several police squads assigned to the work of hunting Murray Humphries and William [Klondike] O'Donnell, who were identified as White's slayers by Mrs. Lena Puetz, one of the residents of the apartment building in which the slaying took place.

Chicago police under Supervising Captain John Stege also were making efforts to apprehend the two gang chieftains.

White will be buried Monday in Mount Carmel cemetery, near George [Red] Barker, his friend and gangland associate, who was slain 18 months ago, it was disclosed.

Looney Quizzed; Released.

During the afternoon, Marcus [Studdy] Looney, under indictment in the TNT conspiracy case, and former associate of White, surrendered at the state's attorney's office. He was released after Prosecutor Dougherty said he was convinced Looney knew nothing of the murder. All other witnesses in the case also were released.

During the afternoon Prosecutor Dougherty held a private showing of several reels of a motion picture film found on Thursday in White's apartment. The films showed White and his bride, Nancy, lounging through scenes of luxury on Florida beaches, in a New York penthouse, and at race tracks in the south. One shot showed White in front of the capitol building in Washington, D. C.

Among other underworld figures who were shown with Whit were Winkler, William [Klondike] O'Donnell, Tony Capezio, a former Capone gangster; Joseph Bergl, alleged armorer and automobile agent for gangsters, and Sam Alex, an alleged gunman.

Malone Delays His Return for Tax Trial Until March

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
PALMA, Mallorca, Jan. 26.—William H. Malone, former chairman of the Illinois tax commission, told THE TRIBUNE today he would return to the United States, but on account of his health he could not sail before March. Malone was indicted on Oct. 14, 1933, by a special federal grand jury on charges of defrauding the government of $59,580 in income tax payments for the years 1929 and 1930. He was also charged with splitting fees with attorneys.

Malone, who looks very fit, was obviously annoyed at being disturbed in his little retreat in this somnolent part of the world, where he has been spending a sunny winter.

Says Health Is Poor.

"Bronchitis brought me to Palma in November and I cannot leave sooner than March on account of my health and also because I have an appointment with the Polka brothers in Germany the middle of March," he said.

He referred to Paul and Martin Polka, tenants of Malone's Pickwick theater building in Park Ridge, Ill., who offered him property in Germany to tide them over their financial difficulties.

[The Chicago Title and Trust company, as trustee for owners of a $350,000 bond issue, on Nov. 10, 1933, filed suit in the Circuit court to foreclose on the Pickwick theater building. On Nov. 25 F. D. Bird, holder of mortgage notes signed by Malone, filed suits in Circuit court to foreclose a $60,000 junior mortgage on the theater building and to foreclose a $50,000 mortgage on a building at 4104-20 Norwood avenue. On Jan. 10, 1934, the State Bank of Park Ridge dropped Malone as a director.]

Blames Politics for "Mess."

"I don't owe one penny," Malone declared. "It was political reasons that got me into this tax mess, but I am going to America to face it."

Malone lives at the Casa Bonet, a small hotel in the Palma suburb called El Terreno. His stay in this sunny section of the Mediterranean has given him the appearance of the picture of health.

[The offense charged against Malone is not extraditable, but there is no statute of limitation.]

PROTESTANTISM TOLD TO UNITE OR FACE DOWNFALL

The future of Protestantism depends upon overthrow of competition between denominations, a cording to the Rev. Dr. Claton S. Rice of Helena, Mont., president of the council of state superintendents of the Congregational Christian churches. He was the principal speaker last night at a dinner in the Stevens building, the final event of the annual meeting of the superintendents after five days' sessions in the First Congregational church, Evanston.

Among the agencies criticized by Dr. Rice was the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America. This council, said Dr. Rice, upholds the principle of denominational competition.

Dr. Rice said "outlaw churches" also help to prevent interdenominational amity. He pointed to Mrs. Aimee Semple McPherson Hutton's "Four Square" gospel as an illustration.

SEE TAMMANY LEADER BEHIND PRISON RACKETS

New Evidence Enmeshes Hall Chieftain.

New York, Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Political ramifications came to the forefront today in dual exposures by the new La Guardia Republican city administration.

Evidence came to light, indicating that a Tammany Hall district leader was the "power behind the racket gangs," which ruled Welfare island prison until the La Guardia commissioner, Austin H. MacCormick, conducted a sensational raid on Wednesday.

Simultaneously, the Wallabout market racket inquiry in Brooklyn led into the spotlight Frank V. Kelly, until tonight the leading aspirant for the mantle of the late John H. McCooey as boss of the Brooklyn Democratic allies of Tammany. Mr. Kelly's club was raided by another La Guardia appointee, Commissioner of Accounts Paul Blanshard, and Kelly was subpoenaed to produce all his records tomorrow.

In Office Less than Month.

Thus the Democratic organizations on both sides of East river were already enmeshed by the investigations begun by the La Guardia Republican administration before it is one month old.

This evidence involving a Tammany chieftain in the Welfare island scandal has been volunteered by drug addicts who have cracked under the strain of having their narcotic rations cut off. Certain members of the two leading prison gangs, those headed by Joey Rao, a Dutch Schultz mobster, and Edward [Wolf] Cleary, have also talked, it is believed, concerning the drug selling activities of themselves and their associates.

Guard Leader's Name.

As to the district leader, whose name was closely guarded, neither Correction Commissioner MacCormick nor his first deputy, David Marcus, would talk. From other quarters, however, it was hinted that the testimony now in hand clearly indicates that it was his influence which enabled the gangsters to flout the orders of the keepers.

"It is evident," said Commissioner MacCormick, "that the minute we start formal questioning that a flood of information under oath will pour down upon us. We already have a mass of evidence on record as to conditions in past years (Under Tammany control). There are official reports on it in the archives of the department and, I suppose, in those of other city departments."

Meanwhile, the lone Tammany adherent to slip into office despite the recent landslide — District Attorney William Dodge—was fuming because he was not invited to accompany the prison raiding party.

Interprets Talk Differently.

Dodge announced that Mr. Marcus had told him that the raid had produced no tangible evidence of wrongdoing. There was no indication from Mr. Marcus, however, that he had told the district attorney any such thing. What he intended to convey, it was said, was that to date the department investigation had not proceeded to the point where the district attorney's services were needed. When that time is reached, it was indicated, there will be no question but that the correction department will cooperate fully in bringing criminal offenders to justice.

Mr. Dodge said he would bring Mr. MacCormick before a grand jury under supboena on Feb. 5 to tell what he knew of criminal activities in the island prison. After his telephone conversation with Mr. Marcus he cooled off somewhat, making it plain, however, that the grand jury inquiry was going forward.

Promises Action.

"Just as soon as I hear that any crime has been committed, I will follow it up, no matter who is hit."

Commissioner MacCormick revealed that early tonight Rao, Cleary and 47 of their henchmen had been moved from the cells in the prison left wing, where they have been incarcerated, to cells in the isolated south wing.

While the Welfare Island scandal occupied major attention the Wallabout market racket in Brooklyn also had repercussions throughout the greater city, owing to the political angles disclosed.

Commissioner Blanshard, who quit the Socialist party to support La Guardia, swooped down upon the Seneca club without warning in search of graft evidence. He was unable to find the documents he sought, but later in the day he located Kelly, the club president, and ordered him to appear tomorrow with all the records of the club, including the membership rolls.

There were rumors tonight that Kelly will appear without the records and contend that they are not subject to seizure in such an inquiry. No matter how the inquiry turns out, however, it was forecast that Kelly will pass out of the picture as a likely successor of Boss McCooey.

POLICE ARRIVE AND IS THIS BURGLAR GLAD

For once in his life Cliff Cleland, 22 years old, allegedly a burglar, was glad to see policemen.

Early last night Cleland and another man broke into the basement of the apartment house at 7541 Cornell avenue and proceeded to enrich themselves with loot. They were discovered, however, by James P. Kingsley, the janitor.

Janitor Kingsley studied the situation, then swung into action. He rounded up tenants of the building and neighborhood residents and organized them into a community posse. Armed with shotguns, revolvers, sticks, and stones, the posse surprised the two burglars. Cleland was caught, but his companion got away.

For five long minutes Cleland gazed on the motley assortment of weapons. Then Sergt. John McArdle and a squad arrived.

"Boy, O, boy, am I glad to see you!" shouted Cleland to the squad as they took him from the posse. Twice on the way to the station McArdle had to stop at drug stores to get Cleland glassfuls of water to revive him.

PLEADS FOR MORE JUDGES TO AVERT CLOGGED COURTS

Finnegan Cites Delay of Long Trials.

CRIMINAL COURT.

Frank Gill, burglary, sentenced to 1 year to life in the penitentiary; Glen Wade, Lloyd Hopkins, and Lawrence Hopkins, robbery, sentenced to 1 year to life each in the penitentiary by Judge Harry B. Miller.

John Reader, murder, sentenced to 99 years in the penitentiary by Judge Donald McKinley.

Chief Justice Philip J. Finnegan of the Criminal court yesterday expressed the fear that criminal trial dockets again will become clogged with untried cases unless additional judges are assigned to the Criminal court. The chief justice said that speedy justice of the sort imposed for a time after the opening of the war on crime is not possible under present conditions.

He pointed out that a number of judges are engaged in hearing long drawn out trials. Judge Joseph B. David has left Chicago for a winter vacation, and Judge Benjamin P. Epstein will depart for a deferred vacation on Feb. 2. The remaining force is not adequate to keep the dockets clear, Judge Finnegan said.

Plea for More Judges.

An appeal to the executive committees of the Circuit and Superior courts, made in a letter written on Jan. 16, failed to bring the required results, the chief justice said. Judge Daniel P. Trude was assigned by the Circuit court executive committee to fill the vacancy left by Judge Epstein, but the appeal to the Superior court failed to elicit a response.

"The Criminal court judges have done wonderful work during the last year," Judge Finnegan said, "but I fear that they will fall behind in the trial of cases if we do not get additional judges.

"The ideal condition is to have judges waiting to try the prisoners, not to have the prisoners waiting for judges to try them. I had hoped to get the calendar in such condition that the judges would be able to keep up with the grand jury. I have no criticism to make of Judges David and Epstein, as neither took a summer vacation and both deserve a rest after their strenuous work in the courts."

Big Cases Slow Courts.

The trial of several important and protracted cases at the same time has added to the congestion of the dockets. Judge Epstein for several weeks has been hearing the trial of six defendants charged with conspiracy to loot the Security Life Insurance company, Judge David was busy with the Wynekoop case for two weeks before a mistrial was declared, Judge Michael Feinberg has drawn a long assignment in the Touhy trial, Judge Thomas J. Lynch heard the Swolley-Souder kidnaping case, and the chief justice is now hearing the racket conspiracy trial.

BUNDESEN TELLS STORY OF CITY'S WAR ON AMEBA

First Cases Last August, He Tells Doctors.

Dr. Herman N. Bundesen, president of the board of health, last night explained in detail the steps that were taken by his department to combat the epidemic of amebic dysentery which was virtually wiped out in the late fall through a strong campaign promoted by his office.

Dr. Bundesen's statement was read before 800 physicians gathered on the McKinlock campus of Northwestern university for the Jessie Horton Koessler lecture of the Chicago Institute of Medicine. It was signed, besides himself by Dr. Fred O. Tonney, director of technical research, and Dr. I. D. Rawlings, chief of the bureau of communicable diseases.

First Cases Reported Aug. 16.

The first two cases were reported from different hospitals in the city on Aug. 16, Dr. Bundesen said. Both patients had eaten in a certain hotel, he said, and further inquiry showed more cases in the same hotel. On Aug. 17, 364 food handlers were examined in this hotel, and it was found that there were 15 clinical cases and 11 carriers among them. There were in addition five cases among employés not handling foods.

All those infected were barred from the kitchens and strict sanitary regulations enforced. No additional cases of the disease were reported up to Sept. 1, and it was believed the disease was under control, according to the report.

The board of health continued to watch through September. Dr. Bundesen said that the disease was then believed to have been transmitted in food, and that no considerable outbreak of amebic dysentery had ever been caused in this manner. No new cases, he continued, were reported that were not due to previous infection.

Report at Medical Convention.

"Nevertheless," he said, "to bring the matter to the attention of health officers, arrangements were made to report the first laboratory survey of the hotel to the convention of the American Public Health association at Indianapolis on Oct. 9. The paper was presented by Dr. Tonney, Dr. Heoft, and Dr. Spector.

"It was given some publicity in the local press and a news item was sent out the same day over the NBC radio network. News releases were also issued from the association headquarters, but these were not generally accepted by the press."

Later in the day, Dr. Bundesen said, Dr. Tonney was told by a resident of Indianapolis of two cases that developed there after the patients had eaten in the Chicago hotel. Six additional cases were found in Indianapolis, all traceable to the same focus of infection.

A report of the Indianapolis cases was received by him on Oct. 19, Dr. Bundesen asserted. This, with the discovery of two new cases among the hotel guests, caused a new examination to be made of the employés. Costs were financed by the hotel and competent technicians assigned to the task of examining. Their work began on Oct. 27 and by Nov. 24 it was discovered there were 118 additional infections among the hotel workers.

Epidemic Made Public.

In October it was still not plain that there was a widespread epidemic, as few cases were reported that month, Dr. Bundesen said, but in early November the health department sent out 16,000 questionnaires to guests who had stopped at the hotel where the trouble centered. By Nov. 8 there were 35 replies indicating infection. This, Dr. Bundesen said, convinced his office that a general warning should be issued through the press. Thereafter the campaign of eradication was carried on by radio, by telegrams, long distance telephone messages and newspaper warning.

The possibility of water borne infection was not considered until mid-November. It was decided by a committee of physicians only this month that the water supply of two hotels, foci of the infection, was contaminated when sewers overflowed on July 2 during a heavy rainstorm. Dr. Bundesen recalled that a broken water main in December caused an outbreak of amebic dysentery among the employés of an industrial plant in Chicago.

Denies Her Charge

J. Francis Bulger, member of the Chicago Board of Trade, who lives at the Medinah-Michigan Avenue club, denied yesterday before Circuit Judge Walter J. La Buy that he had been responsible for the loss of $800,000 by his wife, Mrs. Florence Lynch Bulger, 5200 Blackstone avenue. She is suing him for separate maintenance and he has a cross bill pending asking divorce. Both charge cruelty.

Mrs. Bulger lost her own money gambling in the stock market; her husband charged. She never gave him any money, he stated, and he repaid $322,000 which he borrowed from her, with interest.

"On New Year's eve, 1931, my wife came home from a party at 2:30 a. m. and I wished her a happy New Year. She replied: 'Why, you dirty cur, happy New Year yourself.'"

On another occasion Mrs. Bulger's brother, Louis Lynch, ordered him to leave his own home, Bulger charged, and in October, 1930, his wife struck him on the head with a metal vase, he asserted.

"What did you do then?" asked Attorney Frank E. Cantwell.

47 MEN OF BYRD'S PARTY MAROONED AS ICE CRUMBLES

ADMIRAL BYRD'S FLAGSHIP, Bay of Whales, Antarctica, Jan. 26.—[Via Mackay Radio.] — (AP) — High winds, a strong swell, and the disintegration of the ice near which this craft was berthed beset the second Byrd antarctic expedition today.

The dangers drove the flagship from its moorings and kept 43 men marooned at Pressure camp, the temporary supply base 4½ miles south of the edge of the ice. Four other men remained at the Little America base, cut off from their comrades.

The problem of establishing the winter camp of the expedition reached a critical point, for Admiral Byrd set Feb. 10 as the deadline for the departure of the flagship. If it is not unloaded by then it will run the danger of being crushed in the new ice. Its fuel, too, is running short.

The craft has been drifting within the bay for more than 32 hours, unable to find a safe place to anchor. With the wind blowing smartly off the rounded roof of the barrier, the bay offered no lee for the flagship. The ice was breaking up everywhere.

Mrs. Samuel Insull Jr. Is Taken to Hospital

Mrs. Samuel Insull Jr. was removed from her apartment at 1242 Lake Shore drive to St. Luke's hospital yesterday suffering from a severe cold. Mr. Insull explained that his wife was unable to receive the proper treatment at home and that she will remain in the hospital for several days for rest and observation under the care of Dr. Arthur Elliott.

ENTIRE ILLINOIS RELIEF BOARD QUITS CWA WORK

Protest Appointment of Sultan.

Tell of Organization.

The telegram related how the commission was appointed to administer CWA work for Illinois in November, and was specifically charged with responsibility for the CWA program. Then late in November, the telegram recited, the University of Illinois, at the behest of the commission, gave a leave of absence to Prof. W. C. Huntington, head of the university's department of civil engineering, so that he could organize a personnel committee to select an engineering staff for the commission. It stated further:

"Within 48 hours Prof. Huntington had created a committee of eight members, all leading civil engineers and executives, past and present of the American Society of Civil Engineers, the Wester. Society of Engineers, the Construction League of the United States, the Illinois Society of Engineers, and the Chicago Engineers' club.

Create Staff of 1,200.

"This committee, by voluntary intensive application and personal sacrifice, created and supervised our engineering staff, now consisting of over 1,200 members resident of this state.

"Today we are advised that you have appointed Lieut. Col. Dan Sultan as civil works administrator for Cook county. As this appointment has been made without formal reference to or action by our commission, we now feel impelled to tender to you the resignation of the commission and its county relief committees."

The telegram then told of the commission's feeling that Col. Sultan's appointment reflected on its ability, and stated further the commission believed its engineering staff to be the "most competent CWA engineering organization in the country."

Function Temporarily.

"In the same spirit of cooperation which prompted our acceptance of responsibilities our commission will continue to function until you can satisfactorily arrange to take over all the administrative duties presently carried on by all of the administrative facilities of the commission."

In this paragraph, and the one announcing the resignation of the county relief committee as well as the state commission from CWA work, is seen the potential "dynamite."

In each county the commission has organized a de facto CWA setup. Throughout the state, for two years, the commission has built up an elaborate network of relief, including auditing, accounting, purchasing and investigating facilities. These facilities and the county committees have been "loaned" to the CWA. Now all—county committees and facilities—may be withdrawn. This withdrawal admittedly could seriously cripple federal CWA work in the state; it could mean the necessity of the new administrators to build up a complete new system.

Relief officials declined last night to confirm the impression that these basic facilities would be withdrawn, asserting the telegram on that score spoke for itself. It was tacitly hinted, however, that complete withdrawal of facilities was meant.

Hunter Optimistic.

As to that Field Representative Hunter, the sole direct agent from Washington on the scene, held a more optimistic view last night. He said he did not believe the commission would withhold its facilities.

The relief commission after dispatching its telegram to Administrator Hopkins sent copies to Senators Lewis and Dieterich, to Speaker Henry T. Rainey, and to Gov. Horner.

U. S. INDICTS IOWA LIEUT. GOVERNOR IN PWA SCANDAL

Kraschel and Broker Are Linked in Conspiracy.

Des Moines, Ia., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Lieut. Gov. Nelson G. Kraschel of Iowa and Carleton D. Beh, Des Moines investment broker, were indicted by a federal grand jury at Ottumwa today with conspiracy to defraud the United States. A second indictment charged Beh with forgery of public documents.

The joint indictment charges that Kraschel and Beh conspired to persuade political subdivisions not to request 70 per cent loans from the federal government for public works projects, urging county and city officials to finance construction through Beh's investment house.

Mention Seven PWA Projects.

Seven public works projects are mentioned in the indictment; a bridge and viaduct at Ottumwa, a coliseum at Ottumwa, a courthouse at Atlantic, a water works system at Shenandoah, board of education projects at Sioux City, a Guthrie county road graveling project, and a ditch project at Des Moines.

Included in the counts of the joint indictment is a charge which is made the basis for the second indictment, which alleges that Beh forged an application from the city of Ottumwa on the viaduct project for a loan of $140,000 in addition to a grant of $60,000.

Beh is charged with having altered the Ottumwa application by substituting in place of the loan request this paragraph:

"Bonds equaling 70 per cent of the cost after deducting the aid from the state highway commission will be issued and have been sold locally for cash. The amount of this issue will be $140,000."

Deal with 12 Contractors.

The final overt act cited in the joint indictment charges Beh with having entered into a written agreement with twelve contractors on the Des Moines ditch project to purchase the bonds used for financing the 70 per cent at 95 and accrued interest or in lieu of this, the payment by the contractors to Beh of three per cent of the 70 per cent loan.

The conspiracy indictment lists 19 alleged overt acts on which the charge is based.

The first alleges that on July 20, 1933, Kraschel told L. S. Gates, county engineer of Guthrie county, Ia., that an application for a 30 per cent grant and a 70 per cent loan from the federal government for road graveling would receive deferred classification, suggested that the county issue anticipatory warrants, and suggested that the anticipatory warrants could be sold through Beh.

What He Told Ottumwa Mayor.

In the second overt act contained in the indictment Kraschel is alleged to have told Mayor Edwin C. Manning of Ottumwa, Ia., on Aug. 9, 1933, that a similar application for a viaduct there would not be favorably received by the federal PWA and suggested a similar bond issue through the Carleton D. Beh company.

The third act charges that Kraschel made an appointment Aug. 9, 1933, with Manning to meet Beh in Beh's office in Des Moines.

The fourth charge is that Beh met with Manning and other Ottumwa officials, told them that he recently had been to Washington, that there was no chance of the city obtaining a 70 per cent loan from the PWA and urged that he be permitted to handle the financing of the 70 per cent through the sale of bonds.

Kraschel, who was removed by Secretary Ickes as executive secretary of the Iowa public works board in November, tonight requested the public reserve judgment until he has had his day in court.

2 WRITS ISSUED FOR ARREST OF JOHN M. WILLITS

Suspect He Fled to Mexico.

Two writs were issued yesterday for the arrest of John MacGregor Willits, insurance broker, who disappeared Tuesday from his home at 2215 Maple avenue, Evanston, taking with him his two daughters, Jane, 6 years old, and Ann, 2. On the previous day Judge Joseph Sabath in the Superior court had ordered Willits to turn the children over to his divorced wife, Mrs. Margaret Liggett Willits.

Mrs. Willits and her attorney, Frank B. Teed, charged yesterday that Willits had fled to Mexico with the children to evade the court order. They first appeared before Municipal Judge Harold P. O'Connell in the Felony court and obtained a warrant charging Willits with kidnaping the children.

Later in the day they went before Judge Sabath, who had ordered that Willits appear before him to answer for his flight. Willits was not present, and his attorney, Stephen Love, said that he had been unable to communicate with him through friends.

Friend Speaks for Willits.

Augustus De Lattre, 1406 Chicago avenue, Evanston, a close friend of Willits, who was one of the witnesses in the court contest over the custody of the children, then addressed the court.

"Mr. Willits was upset after the trial, and his career as an insurance broker is ruined," said D. Lattre. "He asked me what would happen to him if he went out of town. He can't have gone far, because he hasn't much money. I am willing to pay the alimony he owes Mrs. Willits, and I think I can get him back here to Chicago within 10 days. He's a good father. He won't harm the children."

May Be In Mexico.

"Where do you think he went?" asked Attorney Teed.

"Some place that's warm," responded De Lattre.

"Mexico?"

"Possibly."

Judge Sabath then continued the case to Wednesday and issued an attachment for the arrest of Willits. He ordered that service on the writ be withheld until the hearing is resumed after De Lattre had assured him that he would try to find Willits and persuade him to return to Chicago.

RACE MAY BE INSANE BY THE YEAR 2139—BUT JUST DON'T WORRY

If insanity continues to increase at the present rate there will be no sane people in 2139 A. D., according to Dr. David Seabury, New York psychologist. Speaking yesterday before the Executives' club in the Hotel Sherman, he told his audience that statisticians have reached this conclusion after studying figures that show an increase of 30 per cent in insanity during the last ten years.

"There are reliable indications that worry is one of the first steps to insanity," Dr. Seabury said. "Beware of the worry monger, because half of the worries of the world are started by people of this sort. Their advice should never be needed. A worry monger can be identified by any of the following marks:

"One who always sees the gloomy side. A gossip, critic or chiseler. Timid, despondent, parasitical persons. Indolent and self-indulgent. The arrogant, fanatical, obstinate, melancholy, and self-piteous. Those who become conveniently sick. Reckless and irresponsible. Censorious, irritable, fretful and fussy people. Jealous, envious and angry people. Hypersensitive and the painfully good."

ANTI-VIVISECTION BILL DISMISSED IN SUPERIOR COURT

Judge Robert E. Gentzel yesterday dismissed in the Superior court the bill for an injunction seeking to restrain the city from turning stray dogs over to medical schools and hospitals for scientific purposes. The bill was filed by Mrs. Irene Castle McLaughlin on behalf of Arthur Koestner, 12 years old, a newsboy living at 3538 South Winchester avenue.

The bill was filed after the Koestner boy's dog, Spotty, had been seized by a dog catcher and taken to the city pound. In addition to attacking the constitutionality of the ordinance under which the dogs were given to the medical schools, the bill sought the return of the dog. The city returned the animal.

Judge Gentzel held that since the dog had been returned there was no further ground for action. He did, however, dismiss a demurrer filed by the city to the bill, and held that the bill was properly drawn. Attorney Robert E. Cantwell Jr., who filed it, said he would take an appeal to the Supreme court.

OPEN TONIGHT

34TH AUTO SHOW OPENS TODAY; SEE BIG ATTENDANCE

200 New Cars on Display at Coliseum.

BY HAL FOUST.

The 34th National Automobile show will open at 2 o'clock this afternoon in the Coliseum, Wabash avenue and 15th street. The exhibition will remain open daily, including tomorrow, from 10:30 a. m. to 11 p. m. until next Saturday night.

Two hundred 1934 passenger cars of 25 makes are on display with mechanical and theatrical exhibits demonstrating the engineering advancements incorporated in the new models. There are also 75 exhibits in an accessory division.

The Coliseum, which has housed all of the annual automobile shows here since the beginning of the horseless buggy days, has been decorated with color and lights as brilliant and modern as A Century of Progress.

12,000 Auto Executives Here.

Twelve thousand executives of the motor car industry are moving into Chicago hotels, establishing temporary company headquarters here to watch the reception given to their 1934 products. Early arrivals were confident that with favorable weather the attendance at the show would far exceed any since the 1929 stock market crash and might even surpass that of the boom years.

The national show in New York this year had increases of 65 per cent in attendance and 35 per cent in sales as compared with the 1933 exhibition. Since the New York show closed two weeks ago reports from dealers throughout the country tell of a decided resumption in buying.

The Chicago show, in the heart of the American motor car market, is considered by the automobile executives as a barometer of sales for the entire year. A heavy patronage at the Coliseum this week-end and next week will step up production schedules in the car manufacturing cities and increase commitments for raw materials.

New Features in Design.

There is more at the show to attract attention than ever before. There are models streamlined in a radical departure from conventional automobile design. There are models with independently sprung front wheels, an innovation of interest to the mechanically inclined.

With few exceptions, all of the 1934 cars have a new styling designed to reduce wind resistance at high speeds.

The show is held under the auspices of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce. The Chicago Automobile Trade association, which is cooperating with the N. A. C. C., estimated that the exhibition would bring 100,000 out of town visitors to Chicago and that they would spend $2,000,000 here during the eight days.

DELAYS HEARING ON NEW TRIAL MOTION FOR TWO KIDNAPERS

Hearing on a motion for a new trial in behalf of Gail Swolley and Frank B. Souder, found guilty last week of the kidnaping of James Hackett, Blue Island gambler, was continued yesterday until Jan. 31. The delay was granted by Judge Thomas J. Lynch in the absence of Defense Attorney James M. Burke, who was said to be resting from the work of the trial. The jury fixed the punishment of Swolley and Souder at life imprisonment.

Sentencing of Julius Augustus (Babe) Jones, member of the kidnaping gang who turned state's evidence and pleaded guilty, was deferred until Feb. 16 on request of the state.

"The state's attorney's police are on the trail of the two fugitive members of the gang, Eddie Wagner and Edward Larue," Prosecutor Mal Coghlan explained. "If they are caught, as we anticipate, it will be more convenient to have Jones here to testify against them, instead of returning him from the penitentiary."

The prosecutor revealed that Jones and John Scheck, who is awaiting the result of his appeal from a death sentence for murder, are kept in solitary confinement in the county jail to save them from their fellow prisoners.

"We fear that if they were allowed to mingle with the other prisoners that they would be beaten to death," the prosecutor said, "Jones, because he turned 'stool pigeon' on his pals, and Scheck, because his act of killing Policeman Sevick in court, started the campaign which has resulted in numerous convictions of criminals."

HOTEL RECLUSE DIES SUDDENLY; ONCE WELL-TO-DO

Franklin B. Carson, 65 years old, died suddenly last night in his room in the Central hotel, 444 South State street, where he had lived for the last 25 years—mostly as a recluse.

In his room were stocks and other securities of dubious value dating back 10 and 15 years. There were several old bank books. In all the papers and bank books indicated Carson was worth nearly $20,000 at one time. Several cards in his desk bore legends of the "Invisible Investment company" with "assets of 5 billion dollars."

Carson has no known relatives, hotel attachés said. Last summer a World's Fair visitor and friend tried to persuade Carson to "go back home," but Carson refused.

Aguinaldo Hits U. S. Move to Push Independence Act

MANILA, P. I., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Emilio Aguinaldo, leader of the Philippine insurrection more than thirty years ago, today joined critics of the congressional plan to extend the acceptance date of the Hawes-Cutting independence act for nine months. He said Filipinos are likely to accept the action as an attempt to favor the faction which champions the act and as a "subtle political scheme" to widen the legislative schism.

WOULD RETALIATE ON TENNESSEE'S TRUCK BARRICADE

State Acts to End Unfair License Practice.

Illinois yesterday took action to break a Tennessee barricade on interstate bus and truck traffic established by the anti-evolution state.

The Tennessee police, patrolling a northern border that extends from the Allegheny mountains to the Mississippi river, are halting all trucks and buses and exacting a full year's license fee even from private carriers destined to spend less than twenty-four hours in the state.

A Chicagoan's truck carrying polo ponies to a winter stable in Georgia was held in Nashville yesterday morning until Tennessee plates were purchased. This fee was $71.20, and this didn't represent all the tax collected by the state in this single crossing because the gasoline levy there is 8 cents a gallon.

Recently a hundred Russian opera singers in three chartered buses were held over night in a village where hotel accommodations were not available until license plates were obtained at a cost of $200. They, too, were merely passing through the state, en route from Dallas, Tex., to New York.

Kentucky, bordering Tennessee on the north, engaged in a traffic war with its southern neighbor for a few weeks, holding every Tennessee truck that crossed the boundary without a Kentucky license. Yesterday the states signed a reciprocity agreement whereby the trucks from one state could enter the other as often as four times a month without paying a fee in the state visited.

But Illinois and other northern states are still at the mercy of the Tennessee police, virtually closing the main routes to the south. This is particularly burdensome for those moving household furniture or other personal belongings between winter homes and northern residences.

State to Retaliate.

"I'll order our state police to the southern border immediately," said Robert Kingery, director of public works, when reached at Springfield yesterday. "If a reciprocal agreement cannot be reached with Tennessee we'll take retaliatory measures. I'd prefer to settle the question sensibly."

"Tennessee, with its exorbitant gasoline tax," said Charles M. Hayes, president of the Chicago Motor club, "will become the detour state of America, unless it changes its tactics. For geographic reasons, it is difficult to route travel between the north and the south around Tennessee, but motorists won't stand for this holdup."

Truck manufacturers, arriving in Chicago for the opening of the National Automobile show today, were also indignant. They cited the Tennessee situation as an example of political tinkering that was preventing highway transportation from developing its full benefits to the public. Typical of their statements was one from Joseph D. Burke, director of sales for Dodge Brothers' truck division.

"Without uniform regulations," he said, "trucks are forced to operate with serious handicaps. It's a national problem requiring national treatment. Truck transportation supplies a service to the public for which there is no substitute."

Chester Moore, director of the Illinois Highway Users' conference, retorted heatedly when informed about Tennessee.

"Politicians are so anxious to grab taxes that they'll kill the goose that lays the golden egg," he declared. "Trucks and buses are an economic necessity to modern civilization, but the politicians, in their eagerness for money, will kill this form of transportation."

HAS $100 BILLS; REFUSES TO PAY "LONG" TAXI BILL

Miss Margie McCormick, 25 years old, 1352 Wilson avenue, was taken to the Town Hall police station yesterday on complaint of Robert Kreamer, 633 Stratford place, a cab driver, that she had refused to pay a $3 cab bill. Miss McCormick displayed two $100 bills and told the desk sergeant:

"I have money and I'm going to keep it. This driver took me home by a long route and thought he fooled me. Now I'm fooling him."

She was firm in her refusal to pay the bill and was released on bond after she had been ordered to appear today in the Woman's court.

TWO HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS DISAPPEAR; SEEK STRANGER

The state's attorney's office will be asked today to help search for two 15 year old Forest Park girls who were last seen yesterday when they set out to meet a strange man. The girls are Clara Bolgoman, 7505 Madison street, and Lorraine Rohde, 145 Rockford avenue, students at the Proviso High school.

Schoolmates said that the missing girls met a man in Forest Park a few days ago, showed them a bank book, and promised to buy them fur neckpieces and other gifts. He asked them to meet him again. Clara and Lorraine went to school yesterday, but at the recess started out to meet the man.

When the girls failed to return home Forest Park and Maywood police were notified. Last night John Rohde, a postoffice clerk and father of Lorraine, and Henry Miller, step-father of Clara, said they would appeal to the prosecutor's office today.

Indict Clothier and Wife for Concealing Assets

Harry Graff and his wife, Bertha, 5052 Grand boulevard, who operated a chain of wholesale and retail stores throughout the middle west, were indicted yesterday by the federal grand jury on charges of concealing assets in bankruptcy. Judge Walter C. Lindley, before whom the indictments were returned, fixed bond of $5,000 for each.

TUGWELL SAYS PRODUCTION EBB ONLY TEMPORARY

Cincinnati, O., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Emergency measures to curtail production, Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell said tonight, are far from the basic policy of the Roosevelt administration in its recovery plans.

Dr. Tugwell, assistant secretary of agriculture, spoke before a forum sponsored by the University of Cincinnati.

What steps have been taken to curtail production, he declared, are purely temporary measures to get business moving. That accomplished, the administration, he said, then hopes to readjust agricultural and industrial affairs "in such a way as to make available to everybody the benefits and economies of mass production."

The "philosophy of the new deal," he said, is one of action, as opposed to the old order which he said held that "natural" forces would solve matters of themselves, and "that all we needed to do was to sit tight, hold everything, and await results."

Driver Robbed of Truck and 30 Cases of Whisky

Stephen Toman, 2336 Thomas street, reported to the police last evening that he had been robbed of a truck and thirty cases of whisky, valued at $473, by two men who held him up at 22d street and Western avenue. The robbers thrust him out of the truck and drove off with it. The liquor was the property of the Clamaga Distilling company, 2118 West Chicago avenue.

CARSON PIRIE SCOTT & Co

FACTOR RELATES TWELVE DAYS OF KIDNAP TERROR

who helped pull him from his automobile near the Dells roadhouse. He saw Schaefer's face in the headlights of an automobile, he declared, and easily remembered it.

He saw Kator, he testified, when the bandage was once removed from his eyes while he was being held in the basement of a cottage in Glenview. His identification of Kator was as positive as of the two others.

"Kator was the man who threatened to cut my ear off and send it to my wife for a souvenir," Factor declared.

But it was "The Voice" who really inspired fear in Factor, he testified, and made him so anxious that his wife should raise the ransom demanded. When being cross-examined by Attorney William Scott Stewart he was asked when he first recognized Touhy's voice after his release.

Hears Voice and Trembles.

"And you knew that voice immediately?" pursued Stewart.

"When I heard that voice again, I trembled," said Factor, solemnly.

Much of Stewart's cross-examination centered upon Factor's acquaintance with Sam Hunt and Murray Humphries, gangsters, whose aid he enlisted when his son, Jerome, was kidnaped in April, 1933. Factor readily admitted the aid of Hunt and Humphries, but denied having known of them previously, except through reading of them in the newspapers.

COURTROOM IS SILENT

Factor's tale of the twelve days of his confinement by the kidnapers, during which he lived in constant terror of torture and death, held the crowded courtroom in a silence which was a tribute to the dramatic quality of his testimony.

This quiet was broken on three occasions when Factor stepped from the witness stand and pointed out the defendants, Touhy, Kator, and Schaefer, as three of the men in the kidnaping band. Then some of the spectators attempted to rise for a better view of the scene and the police held themselves in readiness while deputies ordered sharply, "Sit down, everybody!"

This was the point of the trial toward which the state had aimed since selection of a jury began eleven days ago. Without Factor's identifications the state had not proved the direct implication of the defendants, although the identification of Willie Sharkey, one of the gang, now dead, is considered evidence that the Touhy gang committed the kidnaping.

Call Touhy Gang's Bluff.

The positive identification of three of the defendants meant that the Touhy gang's bluff had been called. Factor has received threats that if he pointed out Roger Touhy and his men in court, his family would be harmed. His wife, Rella, sat in the courtroom and watched her husband with wide eyes as he leveled a forefinger at Touhy, Schaefer, and Kator in turn.

When Prosecutor Crowley called Factor to the stand shortly before 11 a. m., the spectators saw a small man, square shouldered, his blue eyes level and his lips set in a determined line. His black hair was profusely flecked with gray and his own testimony was to reveal that many of these gray hairs were a result of his captivity. He was dressed quietly in a dark blue suit, black shoes, a blue tie with white figures, and a white shirt.

Voice Is Cool and Steady.

He was allowed to tell much of his story without interruption from the attorneys. His voice was cool and steady during most of the long hours he was on the stand, but it broke on two occasions as he told of pleading with his captors not to torture or kill him.

He said he was 41 years old, had been married twice, and had two children, a son by each marriage, Jerome, 20 years old, and Alvin, 8 years old.

He recalled the trip to the Dells roadhouse the night of last June 30 with his wife and a party of friends, including Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Epstein, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Hyman of New York, his son, Jerome; Charles Redlich, and Harold Cohen, his brother-in-law.

"Now, when you left the roadhouse about 1 a. m. on the morning of July 1, tell us in your own words what happened," directed Prosecutor Crowley.

Begins His Long Story.

One quick glance at the four defendants, sitting stolidly in their chairs, and Factor began his long story.

"I got into my car with Jerome, my son, driving, and Al Epstein sitting on my other side," he said. "As we drove out by the west gate and then turned east I saw two men going over toward a car which was parked, with lights on and motor running, near the intersection of Austin avenue and Dempster street.

"As we drove east I kept watching back to look at this car and saw it start after us. When we had gone about a block and a half this car came on and in a few seconds had cut us off. Then another car came alongside us.

"Men with guns were in both cars and the guns were pointed at us. Four men jumped out of the first car and came running back. They shouted 'Put your hands up and your heads down!' and we did. The men had machine guns and shotguns. Mr. Epstein and I got out."

Q.—Were the headlights on your car? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did you get a good look at the men as they ran past the lights? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Do you see any one in the courtroom now that you saw that night? A.—I do.

Without waiting for instructions Factor stepped from the witness stand walked quickly over to the defense side of the table and leveled a finger at Schaefer, who was seated behind Touhy.

"I saw that man there," he declared Schaefer, known as Gloomy Gus, continued to stare straight ahead. Touhy looked up quickly, saw that the finger was not pointing at him, and as quickly looked away.

Q.—Did you see any other men in the headlights you could recognize? A.—Yes, sir.

The witness was then shown a photograph of Sharkey and identified it as one of the men on the scene.

"Go ahead," said Crowley.

"Mr. Epstein and I got out of the car," resumed Factor. "One of the men with guns said: 'Where's Jack?' I said, 'Here I am.' Two men took me by the arms and led me to the second car and put me in the rear seat. One man sat on each side of me. Mr. Epstein was put into the front seat."

He was asked to describe the armed men he saw. Most of them were in their shirt sleeves, he said. He could have identified one or two more, he declared, but he has never seen them since. Sharkey, he testified, was one of those carrying a machine gun.

KIDNAPERS DRIVE OFF

"The car with Epstein and myself in it drove off," he continued. "The man on my left put my head down on his lap. We rode a little ways, then turned right. One of the men took a handkerchief out of my pocket and tied up my eyes. He said:

"'See if Detectives Sam Hunt and Murray Humphries can get you out of this one'." [Factor had enlisted the aid of Hunt and Humphries, both hoodlums, when his son, Jerome, was kidnaped last April.]

Epstein was pushed out of the car after the men discovered who he was. Factor called to his friend, he said, to warn Mrs. Factor not to take any action until she heard from him.

"We drove on and the man on my left asked me how soon I could get $500,000 together," Factor told the jury. "I told him my wealth had been greatly exaggerated, that I wasn't as rich as the newspapers made me out, and that I couldn't raise $500,000 under any circumstances."

Arrive at a House.

After a run on a paved road for about 20 minutes, the car proceeded a short distance along a bumpy road and then stopped, Factor testified. He was taken out, into a house, and led downstairs to a basement where he was seated in a chair, still blindfolded.

Factor testified that the kidnapers who did most of the talking remarked: "This is what we call 'puttin' 'em in the basement'."

The witness then described the basement as he conceived it from his experiences during the next 24 hours. He told of the location of the lavatory and gave other details. Later in his testimony he identified the basement of a house at Fir and Elm streets, Glenview, as the place he had been kept.

Ask for $500,000.

Three or four men gathered around Factor, he testified, and began talking to him. The man who did most of the talking, whom he was to identify later as Roger Touhy, said to him:

"Now, how soon can you get that $500,000?" Factor answered that it was impossible and the following conversation ensued, according to Factor's testimony, the spokesman for the kidnapers being referred to in Factor's evidence as "the voice."

VOICE—Well, you'd better get your thinking cap on, because I'm going to blow your brains out if you don't.

FACTOR—I've been in lots of trouble during the last two and a half years. I lost a lot of money. I'm not wealthy.

VOICE—Well, Jack, I'll make an easy deal with you. You've got a lot of wealthy friends. Just tell us where they are and we'll bring them out here.

FACTOR—I'd rather die than do that.

FACTOR—I wouldn't double-cross my friends.

VOICE—Well, you — — —, Hunt and Humphries won't get you out of this.

FACTOR—I never knew them until my boy was kidnaped.

VOICE—What, didn't you know they kidnaped your kid? Now, listen, $200,000 is the least we will take for you.

FACTOR—I don't see how that is possible.

VOICE—You dirty — — —! "You'd better get it. Don't try to outsmart us. We won't let you.

FACTOR—Go to my wife and ask her to borrow it.

Ask for Contact Man.

VOICE—Who do you want as your contact man?

FACTOR—Herman Garfield or Harry Cohen or Sam Hare.

VOICE (derisively)—Who's Sam Hare?

FACTOR—You know him. He owns the Dells.

This ended the conversation that night, Factor said.

He heard the men walking upstairs to a second floor. Several men remained in the room, whispering in low tones, he said. He was asked if he wished to go to bed, but declined.

One of the gangsters, apparently a subordinate, searched him, Factor testified, and cursed him when he found only $12 in his pockets.

"He called me a — — — — liar," Factor said, "and said I ought to be grateful because they hadn't harmed the women in the party or taken their jewelry. I said I was grateful and he answered: 'All you — — — are grateful when you're in the basement. I think I'll cut your ear off and send it to your wife as a souvenir."

BEGIN THEIR TORTURE

The gangster took a pair of scissors and snipped them close to Factor's ear as if he were going to cut it off, Factor testified.

Other of the gangsters began to snap revolvers close to his head, he told the jury.

"I begged them to leave me alone," he continued. "I told them that the most money I could raise would be about $55,000. I said perhaps my wife could borrow some more. I asked them to free me the next day because my extradition case was in the Supreme court and this might affect it."

One of the gangsters said that $55,000 might be agreeable, Factor testified, but another quelled him contemptuously, saying: "How could you make a deal without the other fellow?"

At this point Factor complained to the men that his eyes were hurting him, that the bandage was too tight, he testified. One of the men took off the bandage and Factor looked up swiftly to see the face of a man standing in front of him. Then the bandage was taped over his eyes again.

Q.—Do you see the face of that man you saw that night in court here today? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Come down and point him out, please.

Points Out Kator.

For the second time, Factor stepped down from the witness stand and walked towards the defendants. He pointed at Kator who sat near McFadden.

"Do you mean this man?" asked Prosecutor Crowley, putting his hand on McFadden's shoulder.

"No, this one," repeated Factor, pointing at Kator. The latter's glance flicked his accuser briefly, then turned away.

When morning dawned on the first day of his confinement, Factor was still pleading with his captors to make a deal for his release, he said. He asked the men with him to get the spokesman whom he conceived to be the leader. One of the men went to the second floor of the house, but returned soon, saying: "The board of directors don't get up this early."

An hour later, however, the "Voice" was again with the victom, he told the jury and another colloquy followed:

VOICE—Well, how gray our boy has gotten during the night! What about that $200,000?

FACTOR—It's impossible. That's too much.

Demands the Money.

VOICE—You know, we've been pretty nice to you. We won't be kind very long. Get your thinking cap on. We got to have that money.

FACTOR—All I can do is to write a letter to my wife.

VOICE—That's out. We want nothing to do with the G. We can take care of the police, but we won't mix with the G. ["G" means federal government. The reference is to the sending of threats through the mails, an offense under the Lindbergh federal kidnaping law.]

FACTOR—Call Herman Garfield and tell him about the money.

VOICE—All right.

Factor was kept in the basement throughout the day, he said. He was given steak, mashed potatoes, and coffee to eat during the afternoon. That evening, he said, he lay down on a bed and slept for a few hours.

"Sometime about midnight, I guess it was," Factor continued, "the Voice was back again. It said: 'Get up, Jack, you're going for a ride. Your friends have been talking too much.'"

Factor said he replied: "For God's sake, I haven't done anything."

He was handcuffed and led from the house and placed in the back of an automobile with a man on either side of him, he testified. There followed a drive of apparently 50 or 60 miles.

Remains for 11 Days.

In his second place of confinement, apparently somewhere on a farm, Factor remained the following eleven days until his release July 12. During his captivity, he testified, one of the kidnapers was comparatively kind in his treatment and the witness referred to this man as the "good one." He continued to refer to the spokesman as the "voice."

The kidnapers, he said, did not care for Garfield as a contact man and Factor's physician, Dr. Herman M. Soloway, was selected as a go-between.

"About July 5," Factor continued, "the 'Voice' came into the room where I was lying on the bed and he kicked me in the stomach. He said: 'Get up, you — — — —. You gave us a phony in Doc Soloway. I've got a notion to go to his office and shoot his brains out. You're going to die unless you get that money. You can't outsmart us.'"

Something of the terror which filled Factor at that time came back to him as he testified at this point. His voice trembled and tears appeared in his eyes. There was breathless attention from all in the courtroom as he described another one of the dialogues between himself and the "Voice."

FACTOR—Please don't blame me for what's going on outside.

The "Eye Department."

VOICE [putting a gun to Factor's stomach]—You Jewish ——. What are you doing with that eye department [gang parlance for private detectives]?

FACTOR—What do you mean?

VOICE—You know what I mean—the Pinkertons.

FACTOR—Nothing at all that I know of.

VOICE—We'll probably have to kill you anyway before we let you go.

FACTOR [crying]—God help me!

VOICE—What are you praying to God for? Your life belongs to me.

FACTOR—Have you no regard for life at all?

VOICE—What do I care for your life? I want that money.

Later Factor described a conversation between himself and "the good one," in which the latter expressed sympathy for the captive. This "good" member of the band is said to be Basil Banghart, indicted, but still a fugitive.

"I'm sorry for you, Jack," this man whispered. "They're treating you pretty rough. I've felt like taking you to town myself, but I'm not a double-crosser.

TELLS HIS PLEADINGS

His low voice sometimes quavering, Factor continued to spin out his remarkable story in the intensely silent courtroom. The victim's pleadings, the kidnaper's threats and curses, were all detailed at length. Factor, as the days passed, grew more despairing, he said. He again suggested that he be allowed to write a letter which would not be mailed but delivered, thus avoiding any violation of a federal law. Finally, the "voice" permitted him to write.

"They took off my bandages and gave me pencil and paper to write," Factor said. "One of them stood with a machine gun pressed to the back of my head as I wrote. When the gun touched my head, I jerked my head back.

"I saw two men before me, holding up a blanket. I saw their faces."

Q—Did you see their faces again? A—I saw one of them.

Q—Do you see one of them in the courtroom now? A—Yes, the short one.

For the third time Factor made that momentous trip from the witness stand. He walked up to Roger Touhy and extended his hand, his finger not two feet from Touhy's face.

"That was one of them," he said. The leader of the Touhy gang returned Factor's glance boldly. His expression did not alter.

Identifies the "Voice."

Q.—Did you recognize it? A.—Yes, as that of the man who did most of the talking.

At this revelation that the sinister "voice" which made most of the threats against the victim was that of Touhy, there was an audible sigh from the packed courtroom. It was the dramatic peak of the trial.

The letter written July 6 by Factor and delivered to his wife was then read to the jury. It was as follows:

"Rella, dear. I don't understand why you don't do something about this mess. It seems as if you don't want me back. I'll never live if something is not done. I sent my watch to Dr. Soloway, but he says he didn't get it.

"You must realize that my life depends on you paying this money. There must be no slip up. I am writing this under dictation and if any one besides you sees this letter, I will be a goner. Don't take the advice of Daniel Gilbert or Leo Carr [police officials]. Remember you are not dealing with amateurs as in Jerome's case.

"Don't fail. I am almost dead now. Sell my Stein Alstrin account for $55,000 and borrow $100,000 more from them. They ought to let you have it because I lent them that much when they needed it. Show them this letter. Try and borrow up to $200,000 wherever you can. Don't try to bargain.

"Don't let anything stand in the way of my release and my life. Try and get in touch with Soloway. If the cops come into this it will be curtains for me. Honey, my life is in your hands. Don't gamble with it. When these men use the word 'Bebsel,' you will know who they are. Act as soon as you get it. Jack."

Threatens Him with Torture.

While writing the letter, Factor said, one of the men again warned him that if he attempted to put any code words in the letter, he would be tortured.

"If there's any monkey business," he was warned, "we'll get a torch tomorrow night and burn your feet."

The "good one" later whispered to Factor, according to his testimony: "Don't worry, Jack. I won't let them burn your feet."

On July 7 and 8, he said, nothing happened, but on July 9, the "voice" of Touhy told him: "The letter has been delivered. The negotiations are on. Maybe you'll be out tomorrow."

There was a further hitch in the negotiations, however, and Factor sent his ring and his signature as a token that he was still alive, he testified.

On July 10, he told the jury, he was asked by his captors if he could raise another $50,000 after he got out. Mrs. Factor, he was told, had been able to raise only $70,000. Factor told them, he said, that he would need a week to raise another $50,000. The "good one" said that he would call Factor after his release and arrange for the further payment.

Gets the Welcome News.

The welcome news that the $70,000 ransom had been paid was given to Factor the evening of July 12. He was bundled into an automobile after the bandages had been taken off his eyes and driven around for an hour and a half, he said.

"Be careful crossing the streets or you'll get hurt," was the kindly warning of one of the kidnapers as Factor was pushed out of the car in La Grange. He walked about until he found a policeman, he said, and told him of his identity. An hour later he was with his family again.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The afternoon session opened with the courtroom as crowded as at the morning session. Judge Feinberg mounted the bench at 2 p. m. and ordered the aisles cleared. Then Prosecutor Crowley asked permission to withdraw Factor temporarily in favor of another witness. Permission was granted and Attorney R. T. Amos of Long Beach, Cal., took the stand.

Amos testified that at the time of the kidnaping he was a special agent in the division of investigation, department of justice. He was asked to identify an imposing array of fire arms—rifles and pistols—which had been taken from the car of the Touhy gang when they were arrested in Elkhorn, Wis.

Defense Attorney Stewart brought out that other articles had been seized in the gangsters' car, including four suitcases, some fishing tackle, and a pair of rubbers. Amos could not recall all of these articles. Then Mr. Stewart asked the court to order the witness to remain in this jurisdiction in case the defense wishes him to testify again.

Attorney Amos left the stand and Factor was recalled. His poise had been somewhat restored by the recess and he settled firmly in the chair. Crowley gave him a pointer and the diagram of the Glen View kidnap house was brought within reach of the stand.

Tells of Phone Calls.

In a series of questions Crowley directed the witness about the cottage, dwelling particularly on how Factor could identify the furniture of the washroom while blindfolded. When this was over the examination turned to the phone calls Factor received at been somewhat restored by the recess, the Stein-Alstrin brokerage office from the "coffee man," the kidnaper who had been "good" to him.

The first call came on July 24, Factor said, and the conversation ran as follows:

Q.—How are you? A.—Better.

Q.—How about that fifty "grand"? A.—I can't make it yet. The market hasn't been doing so well.

Q.—I've been watching it and I believe you, but how about it? A.—You'll have to give me more time.

"Coffee Man" Calls Again.

The next day the "coffee man" called again. Factor again asked for more time and added: "Imagine those fellows [the Touhys] being picked up by some hick coppers."

"They were all drunk," the "coffee man" explained.

On Aug. 7 there was a third call.

"I can't make that fifty," Factor told the kidnapers.

"COFFEE MAN"—I'll take it up with the boys. Are you bothered by the "G" boys? FACTOR—Yes; day and night.

Some of the federal men were listening in on that conversation as they had listened in on all the talks between Factor and the "Coffee Man."

The next day another voice called Factor. The "coffee man" was out of town, the voice explained. Factor recognized it as another of the band. Factor testified there was the following conversation:

Q.—Well, how about it? A. (Factor)—I'm trying to do my best, but I can't make the fifty. I might make five or six.

Q.—That's out. We're not coming out for small money. A.—I might make it fifteen grand.

Q.—That'd be agreeable with me, but there's the other boys to consider. You talk kinda different than when you were here.

The same man called next day. Factor repeated the $15,000 offer.

"I want to tell you that something has happened and we must have money," said the voice.

"I guess I can raise it," Factor replied.

Q.—How will you send it out? A.—I don't know.

Q.—How about the doctor? A.—No, he'd be disturbed. He's sorry he did it the first time.

Several more friends were mentioned, but Factor rejected the possibility of their serving as errand boys. The matter was left in abeyance until Aug. 14. Then the voice suggested that a messenger boy bring the money in a cab. "I'll give you an hour," said the voice. "Go out 22d street to Smith's Bar-B-Q in Western Springs."

The transfer wasn't tried that day, Factor explaining when the voice called the following day that he wasn't able to get the money, because his wife had the key to the vault.

But he promised to send it that afternoon. A police officer was put in a Western Union messenger's uniform and took a dummy bundle with $500 in 5, 10 and 20 dollar bills on the outside. The voice demanded the number of the Checker cab in which the messenger was to ride. Factor gave it, he said.

Two Kidnapers Escape.

Because he was not present at the contact with the kidnapers no mention was made in Factor's testimony of the celebrated fiasco when hundreds of police and government men, aided by airplanes, failed to catch two men who met the cab, grabbed the package and escaped in a fusillade of shots.

"Did you ever get your $500 back?" asked Crowley. Factor answered "No."

The witness next told of identifying Kator in the postal inspector's office in the United States court house. He declared that he did not know "Buck" Henrichson, former policeman, who is expected to testify for the state.

CROSS-EXAMINATION BEGINS

Then Factor was turned over to Attorney Stewart for cross examination. The defense counsel went first into the voices Factor recognized. He named Touhy and Kator as two of those he recognized by conversations in the kidnap cottage.

Stewart went into the raid upon Factor's headquarters in the Congress hotel made by Chief of Detectives Schoemaker in search of Humphries and Hunt.

"Don't you know," Stewart asked, "that in this raid pictures of kidnaping suspects were found?" Crowley objected and was sustained but Stewart continued:

"Don't you know that Sharkey's picture and many others were found?" Another objection was sustained.

Q.—Did you tell the grand jury that you could identify Touhy? A.—Yes.

Q.—Didn't you say you could identify him only by his voice? A.—I wasn't asked that.

Recalls Hamm Trial.

Stewart switched to the Hamm kidnaping trial in St. Paul. Factor denied that he had gone there "to do the defendants all the harm" he could. He agreed that he had talked with Assistant Attorney General Joseph B. Keenan.

Q.—Did you say you had never killed anyone but that you would like to kill Roger Touhy and suck his blood? A.—No.

Q.—Now in this house, did anyone torture you with a torch? A.—No.

Q.—Did you see a torch or hear one? A.—No.

Q.—At the senatorial committee's hearing didn't you tell Senator Murphy of Iowa that a torch was brought out and you were told it was to be put to your feet? A.—No. I didn't make that statement.

Q.—You're in a lot of trouble now, aren't you? A.—What do you mean?

Q.—I'll be specific. Here is a complaint filed by the British government charging you with a criminal offense in England. That proceeding was instituted May 16, 1931? A.—Yes.

Q.—And you've been resisting being taken back? A.—Yes.

Ex-Senator Was His Lawyer.

Stewart went into the fraud charge brought by British investors and the history of the case in the federal courts where at one time Factor was defended by former United States Senator Otis F. Glenn.

Q.—How much did you pay Glenn? An objection was sustained.

Q.—You wanted him because he was a senator? Another objection was sustained.

It was brought out that the case has been decided against Factor in the United States Supreme court and that he must return to England for trial.

"You know you've been cheating widows and orphans and that if you go back to England you'll be put in jail, don't you?" Stewart shouted. The court sustained Crowley's objection and directed the jury to disregard the remark.

Factor then admitted that he had made a $1,200,000 settlement to a group of the investors. Stewart attempted to go further into the matter but Judge Feinberg called the counsel into chamber where Stewart explained that he desired to show that Factor was intent on remaining in this country. Stewart said he would show that Factor had a motive for delaying his extradition by prosecuting the Touhy gang. Judge Feinberg denied him the right to go into the extradition case and court was adjourned until tomorrow morning.

NOTES OF THE TOUHY TRIAL

BY VIRGINIA GARDNER.

Apparently the most thrilling kidnaping trial in the memory of Criminal Courts building attaches has no sex appeal. The crowd in Judge Feinberg's court was predominantly masculine. All the persons standing along the wall were men. All the special seats within the railing were occupied by men, most of them policemen.

Among the spectators were assorted types. Tito Schipa, opera singer, crouched on the floor on the bench, out of sight of the courtroom throngs. From this vantage point he had a closeup view of Factor while he was in the witness box. In the front row of courtroom spectators was a Catholic priest. He said he knew none of the figures in the trial and had come "just because it's interesting."

Factor was wearing the specially built shoes with thick soles designed for comfort which he has worn since the kidnaping. For 12 days and nights he was not allowed to remove his shoes and sox and his feet still are tender.

The jurors, all with their eyes fixed on Factor, swayed back and forth in their chairs uneasily at one time. It was when Factor, in a deadly quiet monotone, his voice rising at the end of a sentence, quoted the "good man" who removed his bandages before setting him free as saying, "Now, Jack, if I was you I'd keep my word; I couldn't be vindictive about this."

Except for thrusting out his lip and occasionally turning down the corners of his mouth the expression on the face of Factor, gambler and speculator, rarely changed. He smiled, his only smile observed since the beginning of the trial, when, after describing the sound of the creaking stairs in his basement prison, he was asked to describe the sound of the train whistle he heard July 1. The courtroom waited for Factor to give a long drawn toot or give three short blasts, but he only smiled and said, "Well, it wasn't an ordinary whistle."

Not once did Defense Attorney Stewart, questioning Factor, allude to his chief client in the trial as anything but "Mr. Touhy." Touhy looked on superciliously. "The man who did most of the talking," as Factor called him, did little in court, only leaning forward to speak to his attorney once during the afternoon.

The four defendants' profiles as they watched Factor during his story presented some contrasts. "Father Tom," seated in the rear, showed a head shaped like that of the Neanderthal man on view in the Field museum, small and squat with a low forehead. His spectacles appeared somehow incongruous.

Kator also has a bullet-shaped head. His thin lips smiled as Factor, asked by Attorney Stewart whose voice it was that said, "You ——— are great when we get you in a basement," replied that it was Kator.

A vigil at the main entrance to the courtroom revealed no one turned away, and no guns or daggers seized.

SECRECY PLEDGE IS MADE TO FACILITATE BREMER'S FREEDOM

St. Paul, Minn., Jan. 26.—(AP)—A promise to the kidnapers of Edward G. Bremer, held for $200,000 ransom, that the family would keep secret all information so the gang might communicate with them was pledged today by Walter Magee.

Magee, wealthy contractor and friend of the missing president and owner of the Commercial State bank, was named contact man in the first note received from the band within a few hours after Bremer was seized, Jan. 17. The family is not coöperating with authorities, he said.

"We wish to extend every assurance that we will not communicate with the authorities," promised Magee. "We are interested in obtaining Mr. Bremer's release. That is all.

Today began the 10th day the younger Bremer has been missing.

END ROW OR I'LL CUT OFF YOUR PAY, HITLER TO CLERGY

Chancellor Enters German Church Conflict.

BY SIGRID SCHULTZ.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—Chancellor Adolf Hitler today warned Protestant pastors he will cut off their state income if they do not settle their religious conflict soon. The warning spurred bishops and pastors to make a renewed effort to avert a schism within the church. They will meet tomorrow under Reichsbishop Ludwig Mueller.

The government collects the church tax, which amounts to a 10 per cent income tax, and divides the money among the churches. Consequently, Hitler holds the financial whip hand in the conflict.

At a stormy meeting Hitler induced the pastors to attempt to patch up a truce. The Rev. Martin Niemoeller, former submarine commander and leader of the opposition to the Nazi church régime, explained to Hitler and Minister of Interior Wilhelm Frick why the Pastors' Emergency league, of which he is the head, considers Bishop Mueller unfit to rule. He charged Mueller with inefficiency and duplicity.

Goering Storms In.

At this point Gen. Hermann Wilhelm Goering, premier of Prussia, stormed in and charged the Rev. Mr. Niemoeller and the Pastors' Emergency league with agitation against the government. He quoted the pastors' telephone conversations which, he said, his secret police had recorded. Bishop Wurm of Wuerttemberg came to the Rev. Mr. Niemoeller's rescue. He told Goering the pastor never had opposed Hitler. The Rev. Mr. Niemoeller hotly defended himself against Goering's charges. He argued that his campaign was purely religious.

Hitler, despite his threat to cut off the pastors' salaries, spoke in a friendly manner. He insisted upon the appointment of a Nazi German Christian in the reconstruction of the church cabinet. The chancellor concluded the meeting by stating he expected the pastors to place Germany before their religious feud.

Raid Banquet for Kaiser.

Upon the order of Premier Goering, Prussian secret police tonight raided a banquet given in honor of former Kaiser Wilhelm's 75th birthday by the National Association of German officers. The police, reinforced by Nazi storm troopers, entered the banquet hall at midnight when the toastmaster was about to propose the health of "his majesty." All participants, resplendent in uniforms of imperial Germany, were compelled to leave.

The former kaiser will celebrate his birthday at Doorn tomorrow.

GERMANY PLACES DICTATORS OVER INDUSTRIAL LIFE

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Robert Ley, leader of the German labor front, today decreed the establishment of 19 national shop guilds to supplant the laborers', employes', and handworkers' associations, hitherto the mainstays of the front, and to form the basis henceforth of labor legislation.

The decree dissolved the workers' and employers' federations and set up shop groups. These will pyramid into the all embracing labor front. While labor legislation formerly was based on negotiations of employers' and employes' unions through the National federation, it will now come through so-called confidential councils.

The councils are composed of workers approved by employers and employes but their power will not be great. Workers were placed under the domination of the employer by a labor law announced two weeks ago. Acting for the state and superior to the workers, plant operators, and the confidential council will be a trustee of labor, a state functionary with jurisdiction over the larger industrial areas. The trustees will supervise all matters pertaining to German industrial life.

Movie Actress Files Divorce Suit

DOROTHY MACKAIL.

Married in 1931

Hollywood, Cal., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Dorothy Mackail, blonde screen actress, filed suit for divorce today from Neil A. Miller, former Honolulu business man, who followed her to Los Angeles after a Hawaiian romance and married her in Yuma, Ariz., Nov. 3, 1931.

Miss Mackail said her husband objected to her work in motion pictures, although he was unable to earn enough money to support them, that he scolded and abused her until she became ill and nervous, and that he accused her of being extravagant and foolish in the expenditure of money.

The actress said they separated Jan. 2.

ITALIAN MAIL PLANE HOPS FOR SOUTH AMERICA

Buenos Aires Goal of 4 Airmen.

BY DAVID DARRAH.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

ROME, Jan. 27 (Saturday).—Italian aviation today entered competition with the French and Germans for the air mail carrying business between Europe and South America. Two Italian pilots, Francis Lombardi and Franco Mazzotti, took off from the Montecello flying field at 6:38 a. m. on a flight to Buenos Aires.

It is an experimental flight not only to establish a new air mail route, but also to test the advantages of a fast land plane over a seaplane for trans-oceanic flights. Lombardi and Mazzotti are using a Savoia-Marchetti 71, a trimotored airplane which has a cruising speed of 140 miles per hour.

The Italians are carrying a half ton of mail. The airmen hope to cut down the French eight day service and also to beat the five day service which the Germans are starting Feb. 3 to link Europe with South America.

The Italians' route includes stops at Casablanca, Morocco, and Dakar, Senegal. The trans-Atlantic flight to Natal, Brazil, will be followed by hops to Rio de Janeiro and finally Buenos Aires. The Italians expect to travel from the coast of Africa to South America in a single hop.

Marino Battaglia, mechanic, and David Guiliani, radio operator, who are also participating in the flight, accompanied Balbo on his flight to Chicago last summer.

The Italian airmen expect to reach Casablanca, on the shoulder of Africa, 1,243 miles distant, in about seven hours, in a single hop.

52 Reds Sent to Prison for Killing Nazi and Policeman

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Jail sentences ranging from two to eight years each were passed today against 52 communists charged with participating in a clash last Jan. 31 in which a Nazi troop leader and a policeman were slain. The reading of the verdict was interrupted by heckling shouts which an official press release said were due to "the spectators' dissatisfaction at the mild verdict."

U. S. TO SPEND $10,000,000 FOR HUNGRY CUBANS

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—(AP)—The administration today followed up its recognition of the new Cuban government by extending to it as a loan $2,000,000 worth of foodstuffs for the hunger stricken of the island.

Wheat flour, pork products and rice will be sent immediately. Plans also were made to dispatch four additional similar consignments as soon as possible. The total cost will be $10,000,000. The action was taken at the request of President Carlos Mendieta.

Another step in the campaign to win Latin American friendship was taken today by President Roosevelt in announcing recognition of the government of President Maximiliano Martinez in El Salvador after more than two years of broken relations.

Recognition had been withheld since December, 1931, when President Arturo Araujo was overthrown by a coup d'état and Martinez succeeded to the presidency after a special election.

Cuba Prohibits Strikes.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

HAVANA, Jan. 26.—President Mendieta tonight signed a decree prohibiting strikes for 90 days. The decree was aimed at a nation-wide strike of the railroad brotherhood called for this midnight, which was to have been followed at noon tomorrow by a strike in various industries and public services called by the National Labor federation.

The decree automatically ended the fortnight's strike of the National Medical federation. The federation, of which Col. Mendieta is a member, agreed to submit the conflict to a conference of members, nonmembers, and executives of the Spanish owned clinics and hospitals within 30 days.

Rush Troops to Guard Mills.

Col. Mendieta ordered Col. Fulgencio Batista, army chief of staff, to rush more troops to the interior to protect railroads and sugar mills, where the grinding season is just starting. Of the 100 or more mills in Cuba, only ten are preparing to harvest this year's crop. Leaders in the industry say it is useless unless the United States grants Cuban sugar a quota of at least 2,000,000 tons and a preferential tariff.

Three hundred sailors and marines from the U. S. battleship Wyoming were permitted to land today for a "good time." More will come ashore tomorrow. This was the first shore leave to United States forces since President Machado was ousted and the boys received a cordial welcome. Rear Admiral Freeman reviewed a military parade at Camp Columbia, returning the visit of Col. Batista to his ship yesterday. The Wyoming will leave probably Sunday.

ADDS VEGETABLE OIL 'EMBARGO' TO HOUSE TAX BILL

Committee Also Approves "Reprisal" Levies.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—The powerful hand of the dairy interests wrote today into the new tax revision bill being drawn by the house committee on ways and means a virtual embargo against foreign vegetable oils.

By a vote of 16 to 5, the committee adopted an excise tax of five cents per pound on all coconut and sesame oils, domestic or imported. As practically none is produced here, the committee's action, if approved by the house, will have the effect of adding five cents to the present tariffs of two cents a pound on coconut oil and three cents a pound on sesame.

Continuing its slow process of formulating a bill designed primarily to mend the faulty income tax laws and at the same time provide new revenues for the treasury, the committee adopted a number of other provisions today including an administrative weapon for combating tax discrimination against American firms in foreign countries.

Weapon Against France.

This so-called "reprisal" tax would permit the secretary of the treasury to raise by a maximum of 50 per cent the tax rates on the income of branches of foreign concerns in this country, if it can be shown that the nation to which these concerns belong discriminates against American firms there.

The "reprisal tax," it was understood, is directed primarily at France, although it is applicable to all foreign countries. According to a member of the committee, the French government taxes the entire income of American corporations which have branches in France, rather than the income of the branch itself.

This is done, it was explained, in an effort to prevent corporations from screening the real earnings of their branches abroad by juggling profits through price manipulation. In order to make its foreign branch profits appear small, it was said, an American corporation might sell its products to the branch at a price much higher than necessary. The spread between this excessive wholesale price and the retail price would be small and the net taxable income of the branch would appear to shrink proportionately.

Reverse Juggling System.

In order to permit the government to bring all the books of the corporation into court, the French government has adopted the plan of taxing the profits of the entire corporation.

Members of the committee said that corporations here are able to make their profits appear small by reversing the price juggling process and permitting the real profit to appear in countries where tax rates are low.

In addition to the reprisal tax, the committee accepted a provision allowing only a 50 per cent credit for taxes paid in foreign countries against the amount of tax paid here. At present a 100 per cent credit is permitted.

Also adopted today was a provision designed to prevent corporations from escaping payment of taxes by corporate reorganizations. Under the committee's plan, the present law will be revised to provide for the taxation at the regular rates of any gain resulting from reorganization. This, according to the committee, will not completely plug the loophole in the existing law, but will limit the practice to a much smaller field.

Stick to Basic Rate.

The provision adopted yesterday under which the income of husband and wife would be taxable jointly instead of separately, as at present, was amended today so that it will apply only to those eight states having "community property" laws. These states are Washington, California, New Mexico, Texas, Louisiana, Nevada, Idaho, and Arizona.

The committee stood pat today on the plan it adopted yesterday for imposing a single normal rate of 4 per cent on all incomes with surtaxes starting at 4 per cent on all over $4,000 and ranging up to 59 per cent in the high brackets. Although the treasury originally opposed this program, no protest was made by the department today. Barring a last minute change, the new rate schedule will be carried in the bill when it goes before the house.

The new excise tax on vegetable oils will be applicable to Philippine products, the committee stated, which now enter this country duty free. For years a major demand of the dairy interests has been a prohibitive tariff on Philippine and other foreign vegetable oils which are used in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Backing the dairy industry is the southern cottonseed industry, which believes that oleomargarine manufacturers will have to turn to cottonseed oil if foreign coconut and sesame oils are barred from this country.

Amendment Defeated by 36-54 Vote.

Then he turned to the bill's provision requiring the gold content of the dollar to be cut from 40 to 50 per cent.

"What happens?" asked the senator. "Everybody finds that his bills are bigger, that the same amount of money taken to the store on Saturday night will not buy the same amount of goods. Then we shall see agitation for wage increases, which will come but only after a lag by which the plain people will suffer great hardships. After wages, salaries will go up, but the white collar class will suffer even longer than the working class. Then long afterward rents and real estate prices will rise. And after that is all over the rates of utilities will very reluctantly be allowed to be corrected."

He predicted disastrous effects upon railroads and all public utilities—effects reflected in an inability to raise wages.

"Some things never will be corrected," Senator Reed went on. "Think of the veteran who is living on a fixed money pension. This bill will cut his pension 40 per cent at least. Think of the retired old man, the widow living on a fixed income from an investment, insurance policy, or the like. We shall cut that income at least 40 per cent."

Sees Higher Living Costs.

Debtors might gain greater ease in paying off their debts, the senator pointed out, but such a gain would be more than offset by the increase in living costs. Small owners of savings accounts, holders of the 55 million insurance policies in America, the senator said, are among the creditors who will lose in order that the debtor may be helped.

"We never think of the line at the pay window on Saturday night as representing a creditor class," Senator Reed said, "but the men to whom wages are owing constitute the biggest creditor class in the United States. They are the people whom we are hitting directly by this bill. If we enact a law saying that all wages in the United States are hereby reduced 40 per cent who would think the introducers of such a measure was in his sound senses? Yet that is exactly what this bill provides."

He closed by stressing the moral obligation owed to those who bought government bonds, particularly Liberty bonds during the war.

"Yet here cavalierly and without giving those people a thought," he said, "we are wiping away 40 to 50 per cent of the amount we promised to pay them. It is just as if the American government stole at night to the box where the citizen keeps his bonds and tore up or burned every other bond found there."

ISSUE OF STRIKE RIGHTS DODGED AT MINE SESSION

Indianapolis, Ind., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Open declaration on the right to exercise the strike weapon under the NRA was avoided by the United Mine Workers of America in their convention here today.

When a resolution was presented from the local union at Coaldale, Pa., asking that "we openly declare that we will not tolerate outlawing of strikes and muzzling of the workers," it was disposed of with the explanation from President John L. Lewis that the subject already had been dealt with in another resolution.

The former resolution, adopted Thursday, favored permanency for present provisions of the NRA as the best method of dealing with economic and labor problems.

Although the question was not put to a vote and there was no definite declaration concerning the right to strike, speakers asserted miners will not surrender the right to strike under the recovery act should it become justifiable in their estimation, Lewis said.

C. B. Huntress, executive secretary of the National Coal association, this afternoon asked for peaceful relations between union miners and operators under the NRA code for the bituminous industry.

After praising Lewis as the "outstanding labor leader in America" Huntress praised the changed labor conditions now existing under the NRA.

HOLDUP SLAYER FOUND GUILTY; GETS 99 YEARS

John Reader, 30 years old, a Negro, was found guilty yesterday of the murder of Morris Dallen, 1022 South Fairfield avenue, in a holdup in September, 1933. Judge Donald S. McKinlay immediately sentenced Reader to serve 99 years in the penitentiary in accordance with a recommendation of the jury.

Reader presented a defense based on the fact that Dallen died of pneumonia which developed after he was shot. The defense admitted the shooting but held that the bullet wound did not cause Dallen's death.

The jury held with Assistant State's Attorneys Leslie Curtis and Richard Devine that the fatal illness was caused directly by the bullet wound.

AUDITOR TELLS OF H. O. STONE CO. "FALSE PROFITS"

P. C. Johnson, former general manager of Arthur Anderson & Co., auditors, was the only witness yesterday in the H. O. Stone & Co. mail fraud trial before a jury in the federal court of Judge Philip L. Sullivan. Under the questioning of Assistant United States Attorney Joseph A. Struett the witness testified that in 1928 he was retained to audit the books of the company. He discovered, he said, a deficit of $500,000 for the year. Previous testimony had been entered by the government to show that the officials of the defunct real estate company had claimed a profit of $800,000 for that year. The false profit, the government charges, was claimed to aid in the sale of worthless stocks and bonds.

SAFETY RECORD ESTABLISHED BY UTILITY COMPANY

The Commonwealth Edison company, with 8,000 employés, has completed three and one-half years without an employé fatality, it was announced yesterday from the offices of the National Safety council. "According to the existing statistical summaries reported to the National Safety council," said George E. Burns, industrial safety engineer of the council, "no electric light and power company of the same size has equaled this record. As a matter of record, none in the same classification and employing 500 or more persons has come close to it."

Blame Overhot Furnace for Fire Perilling Three

Firemen yesterday expressed the belief that the early morning fire which caused $10,000 damage to the apartment building at 5750 Midway park was caused by an overheated furnace. Attorney James McKeag, his wife, Lydia, and her mother, Mrs. Emma Deufel, 72 years old, the only occupants of the building, were routed by the flames. Mrs. McKeag discovered the blaze, aroused her husband and mother, and all managed to escape.

HOLD UP STORE AND 150 WOMEN; FLEE WITH $1,000

Five bandits held up 150 women bargain shoppers and some 35 girl clerks yesterday in the Abrams department store, 3044-8 Lincoln avenue. Their loot, taken from the store cash registers, amounted to from $1,000 to $1,500, Harry Abrams, owner of the store, said.

Abrams was standing near the front door with his manager, Jack Stone, when the bandits entered. Observing the shotgun carried by one of the robbers, he immediately shouted a warning to the customers and clerks, urging them to offer no resistance.

The shotgun bearer stood guard at the front door, while the four other men moved through the crowd of shoppers and forced clerks to open the five cash registers.

None of the shoppers was robbed. The bandits escaped by the back door and drove away in an automobile which they had parked in the alley behind the store.

Late last night the police arrested Louis Kahn, 21 years old, 1502 Jonquil terrace, after a clerk in the store had identified his picture as that of one the robbers. The youth, who was arrested in 1932 as a burglar and placed on probation, denied having any part in the robbery.

PLANS NEW TAX ON EMPLOYERS TO FINANCE DOLE

Sec. Perkins Urges Fund in Each State.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—A new federal tax upon all employers in the country, with the proceeds to go toward building up permanent dole funds in all states, is espoused by Miss Frances Perkins, secretary of labor, in an announcement issued today by the labor department.

The tax would be levied on the basis of employers' pay rolls, beginning on July 1, 1935, and, according to Miss Perkins' rather complicated plan, it would act as a lever upon all state legislatures to set up unemployment funds in each commonwealth.

Employers would be granted a choice of paying the full tax to the federal government or of "contributing" voluntarily to their own state's unemployment fund. If legislatures fail to set up such funds, the proceeds of the tax would revert to the federal treasury.

Prompt Opposition Arises.

With the announcement of Miss Perkins' proposal, which is being put into the form of a bill to be introduced in congress, opposition at once sprang up from conservative leaders in congress.

They asserted that business is already grossly overtaxed and that the imposition of still another new tax, added to the high costs imposed under the NRA codes, would go still further to retard the recovery of business.

The bill embodying Miss Perkins' plan is being prepared by her with the coöperation of Senator Robert F. Wagner [Dem., N. Y.] and Representative David J. Lewis [Dem., Md.].

The Perkins announcement stressed the point that the bill would not provide a federal unemployment insurance plan, concerning which there might be some question of legality.

'The proposed federal tax bill," read the formal announcement, "will work in such a way as to promote the speedy passage of state unemployment insurance laws.

System Up to States.

"The federal bill will not define what kind of laws the states shall pass. Wisconsin is the only state which now has an unemployment insurance law, but measures are pending in many other states."

The announcement set up three general points in the proposed legislation, as follows:

"1. A new federal tax will be imposed on all employers [except very small employers and a few special classes such as farmers and hospitals]. The tax will be based on such employer's pay roll after July 1, 1935. It will reach practically all employers in interstate commerce and put them on equal footing.

"2. An employer need not pay this tax if he has contributed an equal sum of money to unemployment reserves under a state law. He may offset against the tax whatever he contributed. [An additional offset would later be allowed, whenever an employer's contributions are scaled down because of steady employment and adequate reserve funds.]

"3. The old 'interstate competition' argument could not be used to defeat such state laws because the federal tax would apply to employers in any state which failed to enact legislation."

ASSESSOR CALLS AIDS TO WORK ON '33 ASSESSMENT

TAX COLLECTIONS.

Real estate tax collections yesterday were $220,516, making a total of $108,184,329 collected since enforcement of the Kerner-Skarda act began on April 28, 1933. The day's collections of real estate taxes and the uncollected taxes for four years follow:

Jan. 26	$ 11,661	$ 24,108
Uncollected	15,451,729	41,315,111
	1930.	1931.
Jan. 26	$ 70,592	$ 114,155

County Assessor Jacobs yesterday called the 30 deputy assessors in country towns to a meeting in his office Tuesday morning. The meeting will be for a discussion of the 1933 personal property assessment. Mr. Jacobs announced that he would begin to send out the 1933 personal property schedules immediately after the meeting.

The assessor denied that his office was in any way to blame for the delay in the mailing out of the 1932 personal property and real estate tax bills. Other county officials charged on Thursday that the assessor had not completed his work in time to have the bills in the mail by Feb. 1 and indicated that an extension of the penalty date for payments beyond March 1 would be necessary. Mr. Jacobs said that he had finished the assessment on the scheduled date and that the fault for any delay lay with the other county offices.

County Treasurer McDonough yesterday disbursed $350,000 in 1931 tax collections to the state and the larger governments of Cook county. The payments were distributed as follows: State, $20,000; city, $250,000; forest preserve district, $10,000; sanitary district, $25,000; south park district, $20,000; west park district, $10,000; Lincoln park district, $15,000.

Wife Gets Court Order to Stop Husband's Gambling

Judge Joseph Sabath issued an injunction yesterday in the Superior court restraining William A. Banks, a chauffeur, from betting on horse races, after his wife, Mrs. Grace F. Banks, 1016 Wisconsin avenue, Oak Park, produced a ledger showing that Banks lost $7,000 on the races since 1925. Mrs. Banks has a divorce bill pending, filed by Attorney Harry X. Cole, charging her husband with cruelty. Judge Sabath awarded her temporary alimony of $18 a week yesterday.

BISHOP DEFINES CHURCH'S PLACE IN MODERN LIFE

St. Chrysostom's Marks Fortieth Year.

BY THE REV. JOHN EVANS.

The place of religion in modern life was defined last night by Bishop Herman Page of Michigan, as he preached the 40th anniversary sermon of St. Chrysostom's Episcopal church, 1414 North Dearborn parkway. He also paid tribute to the Rev. Dr. Norman Hutton, of Wellesley, Mass., former rector of St. Chrysostom's church, who is the honor guest of the famous near north side parish during the anniversary celebration which continues through today and tomorrow.

Bishop Page, who for many years was the rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, Kenwood, in the course of his sermon asked, and himself provided the answers to two vital modern religious questions. These were: "What difference would it make if churches ceased to exist?" and "Do the churches have a specific function to perform in modern society?"

Cites Modern Examples.

He told of the recent answers made by Russia as well as by a growing number of persons in this country who believe that with the growth of social organization, achievements of industry, and expanse of scientific knowledge the vitality of religion has declined.

"But with all this material development," the Detroit bishop said, "there has been a collapse of our organizations. Poverty and plenty are side by side. A devastating war has been fought between the most literate nations of the world. We look about for some one or some thing to blame for our plight. Our economic system has not failed, nor our educational machinery, nor democracy. These are all right. The machinery in the main is sound, but our economic system is in the ditch and democracy seems to have collapsed. These have failed in the present crisis not because they were wrong, but because no machinery can be better than people who man it."

Better Men Is Big Need.

Bishop Page then declared that the need of today is for better men "who have the gigantic personalities to operate the mechanisms we have erected. The great problem today is a moral problem." Here, the Detroit bishop pointed to the trust people at present put in the machinery society has erected to create public morality. He classed the 18th amendment among such mechanisms.

"It is easier to have the 18th amendment than to be temperate," Bishop Page said as he outlined the failures of mechanical and organization means to evolve character and integrity in people. "It is easier to abolish prostitution and red light districts by law than to learn self-control. It is easier to put legal checks on people than to be honest."

Church and Home First.

The church and the home, the bishop said, are the outstanding institutions for building self-control, integrity and personal character. These qualities, he explained, are not, in the strict sense of the word, taught, but rather are gained by contacts with persons possessing the right characters.

This afternoon, the younger people of St. Chrysostom's church will hold their celebration of the church's anniversary. Tomorrow morning Dr. Hutton will deliver the sermon before his former parishioners. Dr. Dudley Stark, rector of St. Chrysostom's, announced that a reception for Dr. Hutton will be given tomorrow afternoon.

AIR MAIL QUIZ GAINS INTEREST OF ROOSEVELT

Possibility of Contract Abrogation.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—(AP)—The possibility that President Roosevelt might use his executive authority to abrogate some air and ocean mail contracts developed today as he passed word to the senate committee to pursue its inquiry.

Chairman Black of the committee said after talking to the President that the latter wanted the investigation pursued as far as was necessary to get the facts and that he felt he could by executive order cancel any contracts found to be unjust, or unfairly obtained.

The results of the senate inquiry thus far were being studied in at least two other quarters today. It was learned authoritatively that the post-office department was going over the records with a view to reporting to Mr. Roosevelt whether it thought any existing contracts should be abrogated.

Seek Criminal Evidence.

Seeking possible evidences of violations of criminal law, Carl L. Ristine, newly appointed special assistant attorney general, also studied the evidence presented.

Independent air mail operators have testified that the larger operators worked with former postoffice officials to draw regulations which virtually shut out the smaller concerns from air mail contracts.

But the President and Postmaster General Farley carefully refrained from any threatening action, at the same time making it clear they were watching the progress of the inquiry. It was said at the White House that no steps would be taken by the President until and unless he receives a report from the committee.

May Get Preliminary Report.

Senator Black informed Mr. Roosevelt the committee hoped to present a preliminary report at this session, but it was doubtful if the investigation could be concluded. The President told him to go beyond the session if need be, in pursuing the study.

The committee's investigation has heightened Mr. Roosevelt's interest in his plan for a unified government transportation agency which would give the interstate commerce commission jurisdiction over commercial aviation, shipping, and buses as well as railroads.

There is some doubt in the President's mind, however, that legislation in this direction can be obtained at this session of congress since he wants it to conclude its work as early as possible.

RIOTERS IN PARIS CRY "DOWN WITH RULE BY THIEVES"

BY EDMOND TAYLOR.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]
[Copyright: 1934: By The Chicago Tribune.]

PARIS, Jan. 26.—The French government tonight was tottering from increasingly sensational revelations in the Stavisky $60,000,000 Bayonne pawnshop scandal and rioting again has broken out in the streets of Paris.

Parliamentary observers agree Premier Camille Chautemps would have fallen tonight if former Premier Edouard Herriott had not pleaded with him to stick to his post so as not to leave France leaderless in case of a sudden Nazi coup d'état in Austria—a coup which would bring chaos to central Europe and a threat of war.

Following the conference with Herriott—who incidentally is the most likely successor to Chautemps when and if he resigns—the premier conferred with President Albert Lebrun. Chautemps then dropped his plan to resign at once.

Cabinet May Quit Today.

There is still a possibility the cabinet will hand in its collective resignation tomorrow.

Today's crisis was precipitated by the renewal of attacks on Minister of Justice Raynauldy, not only on account of the pawnshop swindle but because he was at one time a director of the holding company which fell afoul of the law. The attacks originated from the opposition, but today a number of young Radicals joined in demanding the minister's head, as did the Socialists, who constitute the left wing of the government's majority in the chamber of deputies.

Then Raynauldy unofficially, but publicly, announced he was handing in his resignation. After Chautemps was induced to stick, it was announced that Raynauldy had not resigned.

Ready to Face New Debate.

Following a cabinet meeting late tonight a communique was issued announcing that Raynauldy would make known his decision tomorrow, and that in any case the government would appear before the chamber of deputies on Tuesday to face a new debate on the Stavisky scandal.

That public indignation over the scandal is mounting rapidly was indicated by tonight's riots and demonstrations. Royalists were again noted in Montparnasse.

Hundreds of members of the "Jeunesse Patriotes," a sort of Fascist youth organization, converged on Place de l'Opera distributing anti-republican tracts. They shouted, "Down with government thieves!" A crowd of 300 gathered in front of the ministry of justice shouting, "Resign!" A mob of nearly 1,000 right wing extremists forced its way down boulevards to Place de la Concorde and tried to get across the river to the parliament building. They were beaten back by police.

Another group of 200, belonging to an obscure Fascist movement known as "Solidarity Française," organized by François Coty, the manufacturer, later caught police off their guard and poured into the courtyard of the parliament building. There they shouted, "Resign!" and "To the guillotine!"

C. EDWIN JOHNSON DENIES GUILT IN INSURANCE PLOT

C. Edwin Johnson, one of six defendants charged with conspiracy to defraud the Security Life Insurance company and an affiliated concern, the Northern States Life Insurance company, through mortgage financing operations, took the witness stand yesterday in Judge Benjamin P. Epstein's court and made a blanket denial of the charges. Questioned by his attorney, Harry Olson, Johnson said that he had read the 18 counts in the indictment and is guilty of none of the offenses charged.

Ernest Palmer, state inspector of insurance, had preceded Johnson on the stand and testified in behalf of Attorney John H. S. Lee, another of the defendants. The witness said that Attorney Lee told him of the alleged fraudulent insurance deals of the defendants two years ago and asked what could be done about them. Palmer did not hold his present position at the time of this conversation.

George Kemp, former official of the Old Dearborn bank, took the stand for the defense and testified that bank officials once had refused to loan money on Waukegan property owned by the defendants. The action was taken, he said, because the bank had no confidence in James H. Benjamin, who was involved in the request for the loan and who appeared at the present trial as the star witness for the state.

Millard married Mrs. Bishop, who was a hostess at his World's Fair concession last Nov. 18. Later he learned she had married Carl Bishop, a window trimmer three weeks previously. Mrs. Bishop was later arrested on a charge of bigamy. The case is still pending in the Felony court.

"The newspaper is an institution developed by civilization to present the news of the day, to foster commerce and industry, to inform and mold public opinion, and to furnish that check upon government which no constitution has ever been able to provide."

FRAUD IN THE CWA.

Who could expect that $400,000,000 of the loosest money in the world could be spilled from the sky without scandal growing where it fell? The President and the civil works administrator, Mr. Hopkins, reveal their concern and even their dismay caused by the complaints and accusations daily reaching Washington. The many worthy purposes moving the administration late last year to the abrupt decision to put 4,000,000 persons on the federal pay roll could be appreciated, but the very conditions of the enterprise contained their own demoralization.

The first requirement was haste. The thing must be done at once. Few projects were ready for the workers. The work had to be made for them and made in a hurry. Honest regional directors were at their wits' end. The pressure on them was to produce a pay roll at once. The least scrupulous men had the least difficulty. Their only object was to take the money and distribute it where they wanted to.

All government appropriations, even in the normal budget which can be most carefully guarded, are subject to the political take and give. The political case is nearly always anti-social. The scandals with which the Chicago sanitary district regaled the city a few years ago were typical of political purpose and procedure.

In ordinary times government spends money, theoretically at least, to provide services and works regarded as necessary. The extraordinary spending program in Washington has for its first purpose the spending of money. The project does not prove its importance. The money seeks the project. Spending in itself is the object sought. The effort is to redistribute the country's income and in part its capital and thus break the depression. The dangers which beset all government spending are increased many fold when the chief consideration is that the money should go out.

Mr. Ickes could take some precautions with the public works fund, but Mr. Hopkins could not use many of them with the civil works money. The hope was that reasonably desirable improvements could be planned in each region and that men who have been on relief could be put to work earning a reasonable wage. In this way money would be started circulating again and there would be more purchasing power. An attack also would be made upon the demoralization of idleness, to uproot the idea that life is possible without work.

The complaints indicate that the greedy are elbowing the needy from the pay rolls. It is contemptible, but loose and easy money will bring degradation. Although the federal administrators are dismayed by some of the consequences of the coin showers, the administration is committed to a planned recovery by borrowing, spending and giving. It will then have to deal with the rascals. They have the greatest temptation and the greatest opportunity of their lives. Unchecked, they'll ruin any chances the plan had, whatever may be the opinion otherwise as to these chances.

The stretch first considered for the civil works program was until Feb. 15. It is said that the administration would like to drop it, but does not see the possibility of doing so before May 1. The extension of time will require that more money be given the administrator. If he does not succeed in cleaning house there will be a grand national debauch.

ARIZONA CAPTURES THE DILLINGER GANG.

The region around Chicago owes the Tucson, Ariz., police something which cannot be put in real terms and probably can't be paid. These police captured John Dillinger and three other killers who can now be returned to the scene of the depredations which they were free to commit because of the turpitude of Indiana politicians. The Indiana politicians let them out, the Arizona police got them. A prison break of worse consequences hasn't been known for years. It was like a plague.

The ten convicts who broke out of the Michigan City penitentiary had Dillinger's aid. He was picked up in Lima, O., shortly afterwards and held as a bank robber. The escaped Indiana convicts killed the sheriff at the Lima jail in getting Dillinger out and then the gang swept through the midwest, killing and wounding police, escaping from police traps and robbing banks. The four taken in Tucson had much of the loot with them, but were out for more. The southwest also owes something to the Arizona police who handled these desperadoes with such neatness and dispatch.

There remains the rest of the road to ultimate justice which will be best traveled if traveled quickly. Prisons have not given much pause to these criminals in their career. They are killers without compunction or remorse. Ohio may have the first call on the gangsters. No one was killed in the escape from the Indiana penitentiary, but the sheriff of Allen county was murdered while trying to keep his prisoner when Dillinger was taken out of the Lima jail.

Ohio has capital punishment and Allen county may be concerned to execute exact justice upon outside gangsters who killed its law officer as he tried to do his duty.

ANSWERING A QUERY.

Women representing the Illinois child labor committee ask THE TRIBUNE for its opinion and intentions regarding the child labor provisions of the newspaper code prohibiting, in the language of the inquiry, "the employment of very young children, employment of girls on the street and employment during very early and very late hours." The specific answer is that the code makes no changes in this respect in the employment conditions on THE TRIBUNE. THE TRIBUNE had no employés prior to the code era and has none now under or within the age range covered by the prohibitions or qualifications. Even the term office boy is a misnomer. The boys are young men.

Metropolitan newspapers do not employ children in their production. In many smaller towns there are different arrangements. In the big cities the code, aside from the persistent reluctance of the code authorities to recognize the freedom of the press as a principle, was of immaterial consequence. If THE TRIBUNE made no better terms with its employés than those stipulated in the code this newspaper would think it had not only put its people at a disadvantage, but had done itself a disservice.

Smaller town newspapers do not all find the code so easy of adjustment to their methods of production. They find hardships in it. It does not follow that the code in their case corrects notable abuses even when it requires difficult or expensive changes. However, it is not THE TRIBUNE'S mission to defend or question what the small town publisher does. THE TRIBUNE has its own responsibilities and more morally to its own people than to the code.

It will be said that children are to be seen hustling newspapers. The greater part of the newspaper production is sold to distributors, who make their own and various arrangements for selling them. In some cases the children may be the distributor's own children. Illinois has child labor laws and compulsory education laws with their enforcement units, and these laws have been regarded as satisfactory by people interested in preventing abuses of childhood.

THE TRIBUNE regards some of the practices of the newsboy hustlers as undesirable, although examination will disclose that a very small part of the total newspaper sale in Chicago is involved. In general it may be said that child labor does not fall within a simple pattern. It is a question of many diversities, each of which must be considered specifically. It will be agreed that there are hours and places when and where no child should work. The fact that a child is at work is not in itself a reproach to its family, to its employer or to society. The question is whether the nature and conditions of the work are morally or physically injurious. John McCutcheon, THE TRIBUNE cartoonist, was recalling the other day that he carried a country newspaper route in his childhood and regarded it then as a profitable and interesting adventure and as a pleasant recollection now.

If the men who once carried newspaper routes got together they would form a large fraternity of fellows who for the most part have taken a good deal of pleasure and profit out of life. Even the professional reformers in child labor legislation recognize that under proper conditions a child may be benefited in character by work, in the city as well as on the farm. That does not need to be argued. A child at a machine which would tire a man, no. A child at work which is within his strength, which guards his morals, which will give him ideas of enterprise and responsibility, which will build up his self-respect, give him earned money, teach him the value of it or even permit him to contribute something to the betterment of a hard pressed family—why not? The proper ages are stipulated by law in such a state as Illinois and the requirements of school are insisted upon.

This is not a child labor sweatshop state and, if THE TRIBUNE may say so, this newspaper does not run a sweatshop, employ child labor or intend to do so, code or no code.

Editorial of the Day

1934 WORLD'S FAIR.

[Indianapolis News.]

Experience gained in administering the 1933 A Century of Progress Exposition in Chicago is expected by Rufus C. Dawes, its president, to enable officials to make the 1934 Exposition "achieve a greater attendance record than last year" and "meet with greater general success." Increased concessionaire expenditures are expected to triple employment at the Exposition. Entertainment, with more restaurants offering music and floor shows than last year, holds first place among new concessions. Concessionaire requests exceed available space. Hotels report that 1934 Fair reservations far surpass the number at this time a year ago.

Historical villages in 1934, similar to the popular 1933 Belgian village, will include English, Swiss, German, Spanish, French, and American colonial villages. New lighting effects over the lagoon are planned. Entrances to the Fair are to display improved decorations. Activities of the century are expected to be much as last year, except that 1933 advancements will be shown. Rectification of 1933 mistakes is being attempted, and features that proved objectionable are to be removed.

Railroads were estimated to have hauled 4,000,000 persons to the Exposition last summer; motor cars 4,000,000 and buses 1,000,000. About 80 per cent of Fair visitors, said Mr. Dawes, were Chicagoans. Economic advantages to Chicago included the holding of 1,560 conventions there, bringing 1,500,000 visitors, who spent $35,000,000. Increases of 40 to 60 per cent were reported in store sales. Chicago financial activity increased 17 per cent, compared with 7 per cent in New York and as a national average. The financial activity that Chicago expects the 1934 Exposition to increase should stimulate the middle west, whose most important economic nucleus is Chicago.

The duelists come on the field. They embrace and kiss each other on either cheek. Then they kiss the umpire, the doctors, and the seconds. Then they kiss the photographers, the reporters, and the police, who are there to prevent the duel.

THE UMPIRE: "The gentlemen will take their places. Ready, fire!"

THE UMPIRE: "Gentlemen, is either of you hurt?"

THE DUELISTS (speaking together): "Don't be silly!" (They fall upon each other's neck, while the reporters, the photographers, the seconds, the doctors, the umpire, and the police kiss each other and cheer.)

THE UMPIRE: "Gentlemen, you will resume your places, please! Ready, fire!" (Bang! Bang!)

THE UMPIRE: "Is anybody hurt—but, naturally, no! The duel has been fought, honor is satisfied, but you must both pay for two window panes three blocks away on the right which were shattered by your bullets."

A military band marches on the field and plays the "Marseillais" and "Kiss Me Again," while the spectators, the duelists, the photographers, the doctors, the seconds, the reporters, and the umpire all embrace and kiss each other as they weep convulsively. Then, headed by the band, everybody marches over to the nearest café, where red wine is served to one and all.

She was just an old hag,
Half starved and old,
Who shivered in the heat,
And shivered in the cold . . .
For her heart was gray
As her dirty hair . . .
(Some folks get that way
When the world does not care . . .)
Not a dog beside her
When she cut her life
With the dented blade
Of a rusted knife!
But oh, the relations
That crawled into sight!
(They grew like mushrooms Almost overnight),
On hearing that Madge,
The beggar, the old,
Had left a black stocking
Full-ripping with gold!

"IT MIGHT BE BETTER," said Premier Chautemps of France, discussing the probable fall of his cabinet, "for me to get out instead of waiting to be thrown out." American politicians generally hold on to their jobs until they're pried out with a crowbar or pulled away by a six horse team. Monsieur Chautemps' sagacious remark shows that French statesmanship is rising to a higher plane than that reached in the U. S. A.

Arose upon the peep of day

And doff my deferential cap.

But inasmuch as winter's here
A morning bed is doubly dear,
And if I had my own sweet way
I'd lie in bed the livelong day.

THE TUBERCULOSIS RECORD.

A DIAGRAM published by the Metropolitan Life Insurance company might be interpreted as predicting that there will be no more deaths from consumption after a date somewhere between 1950 and 1965. That means in the United States, or the registration area thereof—almost the entire country. They base what they say on the improvement in the prevalence of consumption that took place between 1900 and 1933. The consumption death rate was practically 200 in 1900, whereas in 1932 it was 58.8. The prediction for 1933, based on the first ten months' record, was 56. Calculating the expectation as far in the future as 1940, they supply some very hope-inspiring figures. If the same rate of improvement that has prevailed since 1900 continues until 1940 the rate for that year will be only around 24. And, projecting it further into the future, the disease should disappear about 1950.

On the other hand, if the basis of the calculation is the improvement in the last decade only, the rate in 1940 will be about 38, and projecting it still further the disease will disappear about 1965.

A comparison of these two projections into the future indicates that improvement is slowing up, which is what should be expected. Wiping out the last remnants of a disease is very difficult and the difficulties increase as the end approaches.

Dr. Frederick L. Hoffman has made a study of the same subject, from which he arrives at about the same conclusions. His study includes a section on consumption in other countries. The improvement is rather world-wide and seven countries, one of which is Canada and another Denmark, are making a better record than the United States.

A consumption rate of 56 is very gratifying, but it is far from satisfying. Our consumption hospitals are still very much overcrowded and thousands are vainly seeking admission to them. Relatively few succeed in getting in during the period when the disease is readily curable. Thousands will be far advanced cases before they can get help from hospitals and sanitariums.

Dr. Hoffman praises a report by Dr. F. C. S. Bradbury on the causes of consumption. He stresses overcrowding, undernourishment, bad sanitation, poor housing, early marriage, size and composition of family, poverty, and infection of houses. To these Dr. Hoffman adds the effects of dust and some of the forms of silicosis.

If the control of consumption is to improve yearly until the disease becomes negligible, individuals must continue to guard against it. If they become sick with it they must have help promptly and communities must work harder than ever in carrying out their part of the job.

He again calls attention to the large proportion of consumptives who recover and stay well. In one large group 65 per cent of the patients who had early treatment were alive at the end of ten years. In a group of moderately advanced cases, that is, when treatment was started, nearly 40 per cent were alive and well ten years later. Of those who began treatment late only one in nine was alive and well ten years later.

1. Irregularity of the heart beat. The beat may be irregular as to speed, rhythm, or force, or several combined. Among the many causes are excessive use of tobacco or of coffee, pressure on diaphragm from gas in the digestive tract, hyperthyroidism, nervousness, or any one of several heart diseases.

TAXES.

Chicago, Jan. 12.—[Legal Friend of the People.]—A man has made a loan on his insurance policies. 1. Does he pay income tax? 2. Does his daughter to whom he gave money for a new business pay income tax? 3. Does the daughter have to pay personal property tax on stock held in the new business, which was incorporated in Illinois? 4. Who has the privilege of deducting interest paid when filing income tax returns? 5. This man is listed in the Cook county personal property assessment for 1932 on his place of business as of 1933. He was not in business in 1932 and did not file a schedule. What must he do to wipe off this assessment on his business for 1932? 6. A business was started in July, 1933, and if the fiscal period is in the spring of 1934, what steps must be taken to file corporation income tax as of July, 1934, not January, 1934? S. T.

1. We see no connection between this question and your one line statement of facts. The question of whether he pays an income tax depends on the size of his income and on his exemptions.
2. See 1.
3. In general there is no personal property tax on the stock of Illinois corporations, but there is a capital stock tax where the value of the stock exceeds the value of the assets.

ATHENS.—United action against the formidable shipping subsidy which the British government has donated to its merchant marine will be brought into operation as soon as Greece can find collaborators.

No sooner had the house of commons acted in London than a loud echo burst like a bomb in the Greek chamber of deputies. An important debate on the budget was interrupted, and a whole evening was given over to a discussion of the plight which threatens an important source of national wealth.

The Tsaldaris government, which rules by the grace of a slender majority over the Venizelos party through coalition with the smaller groups, will have the support of the opposition in any steps taken. Plans for a conference with other countries which will be hurt by the British decision were immediately formed, and the cabinet hopes that a united front can be presented towards a situation which resembles a crisis to more governments than that in Greece.

The discussion in the chamber was opened by Deputy Paizis with a violent attack on the British grant.

"That measure signified the ruin of our cargo fleet, which constitutes 90 per cent of our merchant marine," he declared. "The law voted by the house of commons will ruin our maritime commerce, because, with the subsidy now accorded to English ships, they will be able to accept freight at much more advantageous terms than Greek ships, which run the risk of being ruined in the struggle for trade under such conditions.

"We should today consider the risk that within a month all Greek ships will be laid up, and that this rich source of national income will be gone. Five thousand Greek seamen will be condemned to idleness."

Many others followed, from all sections of the house. M. Hadjikiriakos, minister of marine, replied for the government.

"It is true," he said, "that the British government has taken measures to subsidize its merchant marine, and has decided to give $2.50 per ton to ships in service and $1.25 per ton to those which are laid up.

"But the reasons which caused the British government to have recourse to this action are not only due to Greek competition. Other fleets, that of Japan for example, receive assistance. It is not only England which fosters its shipping. Three states preceded it—Italy, France, and the United States. These all grant subsidies to their merchant marine, without causing any danger to Greek ships.

"I would not say that the British subsidy will ruin our fleet. Perhaps it will, perhaps not. But as soon as the government was informed of the British action, the director of the merchant marine was asked to call a conference of all interests which might be affected, and to consider what steps could be taken after the British grant becomes effective.

"The government realizes the services rendered to the country by the Greek merchant marine during the wars for independence. It will first approach the British government and see whether an agreement is possible. The government also intends to open discussions with the other countries which will be affected, and find out whether a united front can be presented against the danger."

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Writers should confine themselves to 200 or 300 words. Give full names and addresses. No manuscripts can be returned. Address Voice of the People, The Tribune.

A VERY OLD DEAL.

Chicago, Jan. 23.—The controversy now raging between the adherents of a laissez faire policy and those who advocate that government exercise a drastic control over industry is not new. In early England, just prior to the industrial revolution, the government, directly or indirectly, supervised every phase of commerce. The fiscal needs being heavy at that time, the royal advisers caused every conceivable form of tax to be imposed on the commoners. As a consequence the minutest details of trade and the labors of the craftsmen were regulated to an unbelievable degree.

The master craftsmen, the small shopkeeper, and the laborer in Merry England were "on the spot." The price of raw material and labor was arbitrarily fixed by the government, and many commodities sold at prices fixed by edict. The standard of the products was rigidly prescribed and as rigidly enforced.

The "codes" in those days were more stern though less numerous than those of the present New Deal. For instance, a law existed, and was actually enforced, compelling every dead person to be buried in a woolen shroud. This measure was intended to provide more work for weavers of woolens and some revenue for the king. It naturally furnished a great deal of hilarity if nothing else.

A dizzy plan like the woolen shroud law of old England might be used today to compel the use of cotton shrouds to furnish more employment to cotton mill workers and eliminate a tremendous national expense engendered by paying cotton planters to plow under their growing cotton. And, too, it will no doubt generate some much needed hilarity to a population fast becoming habitual cranks and pessimists. GEORGE WILLIAMS.

A NAVAL PROGRAM.

Chicago, Jan. 23.—It is said that foreign diplomats get cramps in their stomachs laughing at American shirt sleeve diplomacy. They probably laughed long and loud when the late President Wilson ruined the greatest navy the world ever knew.

Disarmament conferences are a joke in so far as accomplishments are concerned. Both Japan and England object to our even improving our ageing ships.

Let us give them something they can understand. Tell Japan and England that for every ship they lay down the United States will lay down two larger vessels, and it is the writer's humble opinion that there will be a far greater change in attitude on the part of foreign nations toward disarmament.

See if they can laugh that off.

A HOSPITAL IN GEORGIA.

Chicago, Jan. 20.—The Chicago public schools are composed of children of all races; these children are being asked to contribute to a fund for the benefit of a hospital at Warm Springs, Ga. Now, what some of us would like to know is: are patients of all races admitted into this hospital? If not, we think it unfair to ask public school children in Chicago for contributions.

PRECEDENT.

Ovid, Mich., Jan. 22.—If our brilliant mathematicians at Washington are unable to determine how many people to employ, at a set wage, to use up $400,000,000 of CWA money in a definite number of weeks, what may we expect from some of the really complicated figuring that the AAA, for example, has indulged in? E. C. HUTCHISON.

WHITEWASH.

Chicago, Jan. 19.—No doubt you will find among your records an account of the death of a world war veteran at the Veterans' hospital at North Chicago some time around the 18th or 19th of December. An attendant was accused of beating him. This veteran was my cousin, and, of course, I was very much interested in the whole case. The case was brought up here in Chicago on Jan. 10. I attended with other members of the family. The case was continued until Jan. 17, because the government did not have sufficient investigation prepared for that time. On the 17th members of the family again went down to the federal building for the hearing, but the family attorney at that time was advised that the case had been brought up on the 11th and dismissed for insufficient evidence and the attendant freed without the least amount of punishment.

Do you think this fair? I don't. It is surprising to me that after all these poor veterans did for the country during the world war, thousands of them coming back blind, crippled, and insane, that such action should be taken by the government at a time like this. I personally would think that a veteran should attend to these disabled men and not 26 year olds who have no sympathy whatsoever for them. I am ashamed of the American Legion that they did not act up a bit and at least fight for what they thought was right.

It is sickening to think that this attendant will again be the one to take care of the mental cases at the Veterans' hospital where, perhaps, he will continue treating the veterans as he did my cousin. I realize fully that the work is not pleasant and feel that only veterans—the ones who have gone through the strain and horrors of the war—should be the ones to take care of the disabled ones now in hospitals throughout the country. MARIE GARRITY.

STREET SIGNS.

Atlanta, Ga., Jan. 22.—In your issue of Jan. 17 one of your good citizens offers a suggestion that readable street signs would be a great benefit to World's Fair visitors next summer.

I feel impelled to heartily indorse the suggestion.

During my visit to the Fair last summer I experienced the utmost difficulty in finding my way about your splendid city because of this very same exasperating feature.

Can it be that Chicagoans are so blind to their city's interests as not to realize the serious handicap it is to visitors who attempt to find any given street or location which they may desire? Miles upon miles of your streets either have nothing which indicates the names of your thoroughfares or else the excuses for signs which are found occasionally are so indistinct, so entirely unsatisfactory to the vision that the memory of the annoyance lingers long after a visit there.

This unkind neglect to the stranger I have heard discussed on several occasions. Invariably the comments are of this flavor: "Chicago is a grand town. But O, what a struggle to get about—because of inadequate signs."

STATE FARMERS SEE RECOVERY IN WIDER MARKETS

Praise Tribune's Efforts in Export Field.

BY PAUL POTTER.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Danville, Ill., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—The Illinois Agricultural association, whose 57,000 farmer members are claimed to constitute the largest state farm organization in the nation, today was committed to the seeking of new foreign and domestic outlets for farm products as the way to bring back prosperity to agriculture and the nation. The action came in the closing sessions of a three day convention in the state armory here, attended by more than 4,000 farmers.

As to the means of permanently solving the problems created by existing over supplies of farm goods the association set up a 3 point objective.

1. New industrial uses for farm commodities.

2. Reciprocal trade agreements with foreign nations.

3. Removal of marginal and submarginal lands from production and their restoration to the public domain.

Approve Tribune Efforts.

Delegates expressed approval of initial efforts toward restoring world trade and the search for new domestic outlets being reported in THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE. They were also advised by their officials that the federal government was pursuing these avenues of aid to recovery.

The IAA, among other projects, expects to stimulate the use of paints containing soybean oil, and continue study of uses for ethyl alcohol made from domestic farm products.

Strenuous objection was expressed to the recent order of Secretary Wallace permitting alcohol spirits to be made from other than cereal grains between Jan. 15 and March 1. It was charged that he had thereby turned over to Cuban molasses interests a market for at least 8 million bushels of corn.

Farm leaders held a midnight conference here last night with Farm Administrator Chester C. Davis, citing this loss to the middle west during a time when corn farmers were being urged by the AAA to curtail their 1934 acreage.

Assail Meat Packers.

The meat packers were attacked by the IAA in their resolution urging the federal AAA to a more rigorous program of action, such as that now proceeding under the NRA. The farm association called for "immediate and more complete use of the licensing and regulatory provisions" of the farm adjustment act" particularly for the control and regulation of the meat packing industry."

This action is sought, the resolution said, "in order to immediately discontinue the excessive profits made upon very low priced meat animals during the last six months as reflected in the statements of income and dividends of the respective meat packers."

IAA officials were ordered to request state officials to comply with the new law limiting purchase of butter and lard substitutes for state institutions, charging them with violations and calling for institution of legal proceedings to restrain further violations as well as the recovery from bonded officials of such illegally expended funds.

CASE OF KANSAS TREASURER NOW IN JURY'S HANDS

Topeka, Kas., Jan. 26.—(AP)—With a district court jury considered charges against Tom B. Boyd, former state treasurer, proceedings at the impeachment trial of Will J. French, state auditor, were halted today when the senate, constituting his judge and jury, took under advisement until Tuesday morning a defense motion for dismissal.

Attorney J. N. Tincher asked discharge of French on the ground the prosecution opening statement, coupled with articles of impeachment, failed to disclose an impeachable offense in the state's million dollar bogus bond scandal.

Asserting that in the face of the acquittal of Roland Boynton, attorney general yesterday, the senate was wasting time hearing evidence against French, Senator Benson [Dem.] of Colby moved mainly to bring about a sine die adjournment.

"We have acquitted the big man and we should not try to convict the little boy," he said. "I'm ready to go home now."

The fate of Boyd, charged with unlawful removal of bonds from the treasury vaults, rested with a District court jury tonight following a spirited final argument by Special Prosecutor S. M. Brewster and a rehearing, at the jury's request, of testimony given by a deceased woman employé of Boyd.

MELVIN TRAYLOR HAS "BEST DAY" SINCE ILLNESS

Melvin A. Traylor, president of the First National bank, who is recovering from an attack of pneumonia in his home at 426 Barry avenue, passed the "best day" since his illness yesterday, Dr. W. R. Cubbins, one of his physicians, announced last night.

"His physicians are well satisfied with Mr. Traylor's condition," said Dr. Cubbins. "Today it was the best of the whole period of his illness."

It was emphasized, however, that Mr. Traylor is still seriously ill. He remains under the oxygen tent which was installed in the sickroom on Monday after he had suffered the first of two relapses which caused fear for his life for several days. Yesterday, however, he slept well, was permitted to take some solid food, and was given glucose to build up his strength.

An unexpected rise in the patient's temperature developed about 9:30 p. m., but shortly after that time Dr. Cubbins announced that Mr. Traylor was asleep and was resting well.

LATIN AMERICANS BACK TRIBUNE'S TRADE CAMPAIGN

See U. S. as Best Bet for Recovery.

BY NORMAN INGREY.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

SANTIAGO, Chile, Jan. 26.—El Mercurio, doyen of the South American daily press and specialist in continental economics, has lent its support to THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE'S advocacy of intensified trading among the Americas on the basis that of all commerce it is the most free from international controversy.

El Mercurio translated and printed THE TRIBUNE'S editorial entitled "Mr. Hull's Task at Montevideo," and in the same issue devoted its main editorial to an analysis of THE TRIBUNE'S arguments. It expressed surprise at the trade diminution as divulged by a comparison of exports and imports for 1929 and 1933, and insisted that South Americans get together in an attempt to solve their depression difficulties within a Pan-American economic union.

Represents Shift in Opinion.

Espousal of more vigorous inter-American trading by South America's oldest daily newspaper is significant, because before the Montevideo conference it was identified with an influential section of Latin-American opinion which, while not actively opposing the Pan-American trade ideal, insisted on rigorous respect for old world links. Recent European policies, reflected in British empire tariffs and dwindling continental quotas, clinched the argument in favor of Mr. Hull's idea.

South Americans are the first to admit that circumstances have placed high cards in the hands of the United States if a game is really to be played for a Pan-American economic union. In practically every prime commodity it produces, excepting wheat and meat in the case of Argentina, South America now depends on the one remaining free market—that of the United States.

Sees Tariff Cuts Necessary.

El Mercurio declared that a reduction and leveling process of all American tariffs was necessary to attain the objects outlined by THE TRIBUNE. It referred to the forthcoming conference in Santiago, Chile, and said:

"To remedy the losses reported by THE CHICAGO TRIBUNE and to readjust commercial interchange between the United States and South America, we must get rid of the barriers. What the United States has not got herself she should buy from us, so that we in turn can buy from her. To obtain this we must get together on a common customs policy."

POLISH 'DICTATOR' LAW IS PASSED BY PARLIAMENT

WARSAW, Poland, Jan. 26.—(AP)—The long heralded constitutional reform plan, which concentrates power in the hands of the Polish president in a virtual dictatorship, was pushed through the sejm [legislature] today by a clever piece of strategy.

The move was regarded as paving the way for the resignation of President Moscicki to make way for Marshal Pilsudski, the only candidate for the presidency if Moscicki resigns.

The reform, placed before the sejm as an amendment, was pushed through on a snap vote while the opposition was out in the hallways because its members did not wish to listen to a speech by Stanislaw Car, reporter on the amendment. The amendment now goes to the senate, where the Pilsudski party has a two-thirds majority.

MRS. BLACKLIDGE SEEKS NEW TRIAL IN LOVE LAWSUIT

Mrs. Myrtle Tanner Blacklidge yesterday asked permission to file motion for a new trial of the $100,000 alienation of affections suit brought against her by Mrs. Suzanne Nottingham, who was awarded $7,500 for the lost love of her husband, Norman, Grand Crossing station, a police patrol wagon driver. The permission was sought by Mrs. Blacklidge's attorneys yesterday in a petition presented to Superior Judge Victor Weaver. The judge ordered the motion filed in written form, to be presented Monday. Yesterday Mrs. Nottingham announced that she will seek to levy upon Mrs. Blacklidge's property rather than send her to jail, if a judgment is issued by the judge.

G.O.P. ROUNDS OUT SLATE FOR APRIL COUNTY PRIMARY

Insurgents to Nominate Own Candidates.

The nominating committee of the Republican county central committee last night virtually had completed its task of slating a county ticket for the April 10 primary. Their selections were said to have the approval of a majority of the county committee, where it will be submitted today for formal approval, and the approval also of Charles S. Deneen, former United States senator, and George F. Harding, both party leaders.

While the nominating committee was reviewing its recommendations in the La Salle hotel, a number of insurgent committeemen meeting at the Sherman hotel also selected a partial ticket. This group, known as the Crowe-Barrett-Pacelli faction, reaffirmed its intention of backing its own candidates in opposition to the regulars for the Republican nominations.

Brooks for Congressman.

For state offices, the regular organization has approved Francis G. Blair for superintendent of public instruction, William J. Stratton for state treasurer, and C. Wayland Brooks for congressman at large. Their selections for county offices are as follows:

PRESIDENT OF COUNTY BOARD—George F. Nixon.

SHERIFF—James P. Ringley.

COUNTY TREASURER—James A. Kearns.

COUNTY JUDGE—Not yet determined.

BOARD OF TAX APPEALS—Thomas O. Wallace, David L. Shillinglaw.

COUNTY CLERK—Thomas I. Healy.

SANITARY DISTRICT—John J. Roellen, former alderman of the 47th ward, only one of three to be picked so far.

JUDGES OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT—John F. Haas, William E. Helander, Alfred G. Erickson, Frederick W. Elliott, Howard W. Hayes, Theodore F. Ehler, Archie Bernstein, R. K. McGill, Emmett F. Byrne, Robert C. McMillan, Delmer C. Patterson, H. M. Sharpe, and Harry F. Hamlin.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS [city]—George F. Nixon, Louis Nettelhorst, Felix Kucharski, Robert C. Rohn, A. W. Williams, Dr. Hubert Eckwall, Mrs. Murry Nelson, and A. O. Rogers.

Complete Slate Today.

The ticket is incomplete in its present form, but the nominating committee, according to Edward F. Moore, secretary of the county committee, will have it finished for today's meetings. There are yet to be named candidates to one more place on the Municipal court bench, two more county commissioners from the city, five from the country towns, and two more candidates for the sanitary district.

Senator Deneen, who is to name the candidate for county judge, was said to have Superior Judge Dan Trude and Municipal Judge Samuel Heller under consideration. To him also are credited two other of the major posts: Kearns, now city treasurer, for county treasurer; and Allen for clerk of the Probate court.

Candidates Well Known.

C. Wayland Brooks, the candidate for congressman at large, was appointed as an assistant state's attorney of Cook county in 1926, and served in that capacity for seven years. Brooks, Nixon, now a member of the board of tax appeals, and Kearns are well known in politics.

Ringley was state commander of the American Legion in 1933 and is employed by the Commonwealth Edison company.

The candidates announced by the rebel group are: Charles S. Peterson, former city treasurer, for county treasurer; Patrick S. Smith, former city clerk, for sheriff; Arthur F. Albert, president of the county board; John A. Sbarbaro, Probate judge; George F. Barrett, assessor; and William Burmeister, board of tax appeals.

New Orleans, La., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Senator Huey P. Long's weekly newspaper, the American Progress, appeared one day late today and summarized in a page one box the outcome of the New Orleans election in which Mayor T. Semmes Walmsley defeated the Long slate.

In tall, black letters, it was headed: "God pity New Orleans!"

DEMOCRATS SEEK TO CAPTURE MORE ASSEMBLY SEATS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—The Democratic state committee today indorsed plans for securing the nomination of two Democratic candidates in each senatorial district in Illinois, where there is an apparent opportunity to elect more than one house member to the legislature. A resolution offered by J. Earl Houston of Peoria, was adopted, authorizing the appointment of a committee of five members to go into each senatorial district and urge this proposal.

Lieut. Gov. Thomas Donovan, presiding at the session of the committee, urged the adoption of this method of insuring Democratic control of the house in the next election. He pointed out that in no less than six districts Democrats could have elected two men instead of one at the last general election, had they nominated two. The Democratic objective in the next election, he said, should be 91 members of the house.

Urges Hostile Members Quit.

Committeeman Dan Sullivan, in indorsing the proposal, suggested that the missionaries might, with propriety, urge the retirement of some of the present members. No names were mentioned, but it is presumed he had reference to Representative Frank McClure of Abingdon who has been a legislative thorn in the side of the state administration.

A lengthy resolution indorsing the state and national Democratic administrations and the services of the Democratic delegation from Illinois in the national congress was adopted. Senators Lewis and Dieterich and Speaker Rainey were praised. Chairman Donovan and Secretary Edward Allen of Quincy were authorized to prepare the customary call for the state convention to be held on the second Friday after the April 10 primaries.

14 Seek One Post.

A proposal to indorse a full slate of candidates became embarrassing when it was announced that no fewer than thirteen men and one woman are in the field for state superintendent of public instruction.

Mrs. Eva Batterton of Springfield, who made the race against Francis G. Blair in the last election, it was stated, would again seek the nomination. The men mentioned were W. C. Reavis, University of Chicago; Robert C. Moore, Carlinville; John A. Hayes, Peoria; Claude Vick, McKendree college; Leo B. Walsh, Tuluca; R. W. Fairchild, Illinois State Normal; Otto F. Akin, superintendent of the Cook county schools; Charles Stadtman, Wood River; Frank Jansen, Rockford; W. W. Haggard, Joliet; John Wieland, Calumet City; Roscoe Pulliam, Harrisburg, and G. E. Thompson, St. Charles.

Committee to Pass on Candidate.

After a number of prospective candidates had been presented to the committee, it was determined to make no formal indorsements at this time. A subcommittee was authorized to report on the qualifications of the candidates for superintendent, with a view to making an indorsement later. The committee is to report within two weeks. The committee is composed of Dan Sullivan and Edmund J. Mulcahy, Chicago; J. Earl Houston, Peoria; John Kasserman, Newton, and Harry Hershey, Taylorville.

While no indorsement was requested for state treasurer, individually the members expressed themselves as favorable to John H. Stelle, McLeansboro, assistant state auditor who is expected to go into the primary without serious opposition.

Resolutions thanking National Committeemen Patrick Nash and Mrs. Elizabeth Conkey for their party services were adopted.

Object Is to Add Them to Democrats.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Republican independents who helped Franklin D. Roosevelt into the White House probably will receive sympathetic cooperation from the Democratic national committee in the fall elections.

How far this cooperation will extend has not yet been decided, but Chairman Farley of the national committee observed as a purely "personal" comment today that he knew enough about California "to know that of course its voters will return Hiram Johnson to the senate."

Two other Progressive Republican senators, up for reelection this fall, broke with the party, as did Johnson, to support President Roosevelt.

They are Senator La Follette [Radical Rep., Wis.] and Senator Cutting [Radical Rep., N. M.], and the benediction of Roosevelt probably would be welcomed by both, particularly La Follette, who apparently faces a hard contest.

Procedure Still Indefinite.

Party members said the administration had apparently not formulated a hard and fast policy in the November elections, but that support of both La Follette and Cutting would fit into the President's efforts to align permanently the liberal sections of the west and northwest—and elsewhere, too—with the Democratic party.

Though the postmaster general supported Joseph McKee, independent, in New York against Fiorello La Guardia, an independent Republican of long standing, it was pointed out that La Guardia did not formally announce support of Mr. Roosevelt during the presidential campaign, as did the California, New Mexico, and Wisconsin senators.

McKee also took a licking in New York. On its face this would lead to careful consideration before the administration allowed its name to be brought into another such contest.

Some observers close to the administration surmise, too, that the reorganization of the Democartic national committee might have significance beyond the move to purge politics and government.

Scorns Party Labels.

The realignment, if carried far enough, would make it easier to weld liberal sentiment and to aid those candidates nominally outside the Democratic party circle whom the administration desired to aid.

Representative McGrath [Dem., Cal.] today called on the Democrats of the state to support the one time Bull Mooser. "This is no time to carp about party labels," McGrath said.

Beyond saying that he was "gratified and deeply appreciative" of the postmaster general's statement Senator Johnson did not comment.

Friends of La Follette said it also had been suggested that he run as a Democrat and that he had given this consideration. It was regarded as more likely, however, that he would enter the Republican primary or a third party primary.

JAPAN IS STIRRED BY ATTACK IN DIET ON NAVAL BUDGET

Expenditures Unneeded, Party Chief Charges.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

TOKIO, Jan. 26.—A sensation was created in the Japanese diet today when Shinya Uchida, former parliamentary minister of the navy and at present the Seiyukai party's chief naval expert, demanded "better reasons than offered" for the tremendous appropriations demanded by the Japanese navy, "especially since Premier Saito assures in his diet speech the maintenance of friendly relations with other nations."

Uchida staked his political reputation in predicting that the navy would spend at least 70 million dollars more than at present is demanded for the single item of replenishment.

The expert cited examples of the navy asking appropriations, getting them, and then immediately demanding more. He said there is no end if this practice is continued. He hinted that if a second replenishment appropriation is approved, which would bring the navy up to the London treaty limit, the navy already plans to introduce a third replenishment program which would be capable of bringing the navy above the treaty limit.

Japan Suppresses Speech.

Following Uchida's speech the diet went into secret session. A censorship was placed on news of the matter.

The premier replied to a question as to whether military and naval armaments need further strengthening by pointing out that while Japan is friendly with other nations, there is unrest in other countries and the world is endeavoring to restrict Japan's trade.

Uchida fumed, declaring that the people are prepared to sacrifice their lives and undergo any sort of suffering if there is real necessity, but that the explanation offered by the premier certainly does not warrant the appropriations.

Observers feel that opponents of the military clique are likely to utilize recent statements assuring the world of Japan's peaceful policy as a means of weakening the military hold, but it is generally conceded that passage of the budget is a foregone conclusion.

Soviet Press Flays Japan.

MOSCOW, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Suspicion and distrust of Japanese intentions in the far east were voiced in the soviet press today. It was the first reaction to the speech of Foreign Minister Koki Hirota before the Japanese diet and the resignation of Gen. Sadao Araki as minister of war.

Mocking the Japanese foreign minister's reference to stabilization of peace in Asia, Karl Radek, writing in the newspaper Isvestia, warned that "peace is in danger despite and owing to the 'stabilization measures' of Japanese imperialists."

"The stabilization of peace in the far east which Hirota mentions," said Radek, "means establishment of such order as best will serve the interests of Japanese imperialists. In other words, peace can be established in Asia when it is in the hands of Japanese imperialists.

"Having seized Manchuria and improved railroad transportation systems there, and constructed many new airdromes, the Japanese military now openly propagates the necessity of war with the soviet union. The U. S. S. R. does not observe these military preparations with folded hands, but openly prepares to defend soviet territory."

Japan to Protest to Duce.

ROME, Jan. 26.—(AP)—A strong Japanese protest will be made tomorrow to Premier Mussolini against a recent article written by Il Duce on the far east and a speech by Marquis Giacomo Medici del Vascello in the chamber of deputies.

In the article and the speech both Premier Mussolini and the marquis alluded to the "yellow peril."

The Japanese ambassador, Hajime Matsushima, will deliver the protest verbally. He requested an appointment with Mussolini on instructions from Tokio.

A campaign has been waged for a long time in the Fascist press against Japanese economic aggression. This aggression, it is asserted, has seriously injured the Italian silk and cotton goods market.

Baby Born in Auto and Mother Are "Doing Well"

Mrs. Marion McCloskey and her baby girl, who was born early yesterday in an automobile on the way to the hospital, were reported "doing well" yesterday in the American hospital. Mrs. McCloskey and her husband, Martin, left their home at 4153 Kenmore avenue for the county hospital. The car broke down in the 3900 block of Southport avenue. McCloskey hailed another motorist, George Gerker, 5435 Giddings street, and Mrs. McCloskey was transferred to his car. The baby was born in the auto as Gerker was driving to the American hospital.

SATURDAY NEWS OF NEW BOOKS

Drama, Offered in Book Form, Considered Here

Two Plays by O'Neill Are Called Ineffectual.

BY FANNY BUTCHER.

DRAMA as passive intellectual pleasure and stimulation has recently had many contributions of the first order in the publication of plays which have been otherwise available only as active stimuli through the eyes and ears of audiences. Eugene O'Neill, George Kaufman, Maxwell Anderson, Clemence Dane, Sean O'Casey, among the literary aristocrats of the drama, have all published their successes.

Mr. O'Neill's "Days Without End" [Random House], published simultaneously with the presentation of the play on Jan. 18, reads even more badly than does his "Ah Wilderness," which likewise saw the light of print on the same day that it saw its first public limelights. "Ah Wilderness" [Random House], subtitled "A Comedy of Recollections," is a rejuvenation of a period when adolescence was comic, not clinical, and in it for the first time Mr. O'Neill forsakes the dour and the dread (which he made terrifically and beautifully and superbly his own in his early plays about the sea), forsakes the subtle and the implicative (as he did in "Strange Interlude" and "Emperor Jones"), and writes a comedy of the period in the psychology of the period. The result is, to me, ineffectual.

But its ineffectualness is high achievement compared to the result of "Days Without End." Mr. O'Neill subtitles it "A Modern Miracle Play" and takes as his motif the age-old urge of man toward his God. He translates that eternal yearning into modern psychology . . . makes his hero the potential author of a book in which he writes out his past gropings and tries through it to map out his future conduct.

It is a time worn and frayed technique when the hero tries to resolve his own conscience through telling his wife—through a character in his book—of his own guilt. How the hero finds at last his God through his need to believe that the woman who has, through love, given him life is the "message" of the play. It is no laying on of healing hands to the reader. Mr. O'Neill in his two most recent works has not, it seems to me, beaten out immortal leaves to add to his literary crown, no matter how golden they have proven.

A play which does seem to me to have permanent literary value, power, and strength, and sincerity is "Men in White," by Sidney Kingsley [Covici-Friede], a drama which concerns young doctors and takes place in a hospital. It gives the reader that terrific sense of dazed reality that life gives him . . . that truth can at times seem so unreal. It is written for a purpose, but that purpose is the depiction of a spirit, an ideal, and for that reason the play gives the reader no atmosphere of propaganda. Simply it states what a young doctor can and may expect of life. It is a serious, honest, intelligent piece of literary dramatic writing.

Maxwell Anderson's "Mary of Scotland" [Doubleday-Doran] is an impressive literary dramatic re-creation of a period and interpretation of a character. In it the heroine is a tool not of fate but of the sagacious and skillful Elizabeth who planned the debacle of the unfortunate Mary. No fool, not even too weak, only not so strong as the strongest woman of her day, Mary treads her tragic downward steps. There is epic tragedy in "Mary of Scotland."

Clemence Dane, whose dramas, "Will Shakespeare" and "Wild Decembers," re-created the lives of a great poet and of the Bronte sisters, has chosen another literary figure as the hero of her newest play, "Coming of Age" [Doubleday-Doran]. Thomas Chatterton, the tragic young poet who, in 1770, starved, drank poison as he cried, "Let me go on where I left off. . . . Let me come of age in pleasure and pain," is brought to life again in modern London and his experiences set down in what the author calls "modern rhythms with a verse formula," and Richard Addinsell has written accompanying music which is so integral a part of the play that his name appears as co-author.

Sean O'Casey has deserted Dublin in his latest, "Within the Gates" [Macmillan], and has written a phantasy of a London park inside whose gates the cycle of the seasons mirrors the cycle of the lives of characters who never bear a name, only the titles of their characteristics.

The two plays in which George Kaufman has had a collaborating hand are both, as you might suppose, humorous. One of them, "The Dark Tower" [Random House], which he wrote with Alexander Woollcott, who is given credit for being one of the great wits of the age, is a melodrama in which the hero pulls off a pretty little murder . . . a plot of utter inconsequence worked out with some of the most amusing and wittiest lines of the day.

Sequel to "Of Thee I Sing," itself a satire in a form only brilliantly skirting bitterness, "Let 'Em Eat Cake" [Knopf], isn't on the alkaline side. It goes right over to the acid. George Kaufman, Morrie Ryskind and Ira Gershwin have done in this opus something that is so funny it isn't even funny, if you know what I mean.

"The Lake," by Dorothy Massingham [Doubleday-Doran], the play in which Katharine Hepburn came back to the legitimate drama, is one of those plays about love and its manifestations which you have read nigh on to a hundred times in assorted forms and many times in better ones.

Revampings of two old plays have come to us since Christmas. "The School for Husbands," repeated in rhyme from Molière's comedy "L'Ecole des Maris," by Arthur Guiterman and Lawrence Langner [Samuel French], presented in the fall by the Theater Guild, and "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in a new dramatic version by A. E. Thomas [Appleton-Century], which was recently used for the annual revival of the Players' Club of New York.

Clode Head's "Grotesques," presented with great acclaim 18 years ago by the Chicago Little theater, "the first play written in America to make use of complete stylization, with the background an integral part of the play," has but recently been published for the first time in book form by the Dramatic Publishing company.

Wilder Certain of Great Dawn in Literature

Declares His Faith Before Friends of Writers.

"THE Future of American Literature" was the subject of the lecture which Thornton Wilder gave before the Friends of American Writers on Wednesday. Instead of a mere lecture Mr. Wilder offered a prophecy: No matter how great that young man is as an author, his real vocation is that of a teacher and evangelist! Where the great preachers of the past exhorted their followers to spiritual ideals he exhorts to the fulfillment of the gospel of beauty, of creative perfection. And nobody in America today can speak that gospel with surer tongues of men and of angels than Thornton Wilder.

With the glitter taken off and only the facts remaining, the gist of his memorable speech was this:

The darkest possible future for American literature would fulfill the prophecies of the Spenglerians, who declare that in the long life curve of cultural interests we have reached the impoverishment of the spiritual springs of the fine arts; that all the molds and the styles of creative art have been exhausted. Mr. Wilder declared that to his mind human creation is inexhaustible and has within itself the power to refresh those springs.

And thus also in answer to the other gloomy prophets who declare that the social problems of the day are so overpowering that the artist can't hear himself think; that the artist in the turmoil of an unadjusted political state has no time to enter the arena of pure artistic creation.

It is possible, he said, that instead of those gloomy futures American literature may just continue as it has progressed thus far, with one great voice coming regularly out of the clamor of lesser talents. It has been true, he said, that in the past of American literature the great artist was never known in his own time, but some secondary talent was always thought the major one: Hawthorne considered the great New England novelist, when it was really Melville to whom time has given that crown; the Concord poets, when really Whitman was the age's great poetic voice; Emerson as essayist when it was really Thoreau who was writing the immortal short prose.

But such a future, as such a past, would be "tepid," he said, and he wanted to ask and answer so far as lay within his power the question, "Have we a chance of a great and golden renaissance in literature?"

All of the great artistic renaissances have had some things in common, he declared. There was always "a contagious confusion of taste." Beauty was not in the hands of the few. Even the humblest were connoisseurs. And he reminded his audience that even the sign posts in Greece were in hexameters, in the Elizabethan period even the soldiers wrote sonnets and servants had to know how to sing madrigals. Every humble thing was touched with beauty.

He saw in America, he said, a gradual slow but rising tide of discriminations. In his early youth, he declared, publishers and theatrical producers could predict what the public would like. Now nobody can predict and such unpredictability is a healthy sign.

In every great age, he declared, there emerged entirely new forms of great art, and already in America those new forms are evident in music obviously in the use of dissonance, in drama in the forms influenced by the moving pictures, the pageant, the shock of plot and counterplot.

Every great age has had, he declared, a keen enjoyment of tragedy. It is illegitimate to present pain for the sake of causing pain, he said, but the great poetic treatment of the interpretation of pain showing the proud statement of the human being against the tragic is the highest form of art. "Tragedy wrapped in understanding," he called it. America has not as yet reached the stage where it popularly wants tragedy, but the possibility has already made itself felt, he declared.

Suppose America may be at the morning break of a great literary age, the way that age would differ from all other great renaissances of the past would be in the subject matter of the art which it created. The creative work of other great ages was dictated by a few at the top. Creative work of the possible great age in America would have to come from "the dreaming anonymous souls of 126 millions who must dramatize themselves."

Thorton Wilder feels, as he quoted "the greatest living American poet," Edwin Arlington Robinson, as feeling in 1906, that he is "present at a great dawn."

Jeffers' Poem Is Beautiful, But Baffling

"Give Your Heart to Hawks" Offers Much.

BY MARION STROBEL.

ROBINSON JEFFERS continues to be a romantic figure, and in his latest collection of poems, "Give Your Heart to the Hawks," he is still a baffling poet. Jeffers, the man, is a magnificent physical specimen who, with his own hands, lifted ocean washed rocks to build a tower overlooking the Pacific. Jeffers, the man, stands out sharp. Whatever else he may be, his self-built tower and his appearance are romance.

His poetry has no such simplicity of outline. In his latest volume we find again a disturbing combination of grandeur and irrelevance. Indeed, often the grandeur is in itself an irrelevance to the neurotic tale that he tells. "Give Your Heart to the Hawks" has for basis the Cain and Abel story. When Michael is found, in adultery, with Fayne, his brother's red haired wife, he is killed by Lance, the brother. Though all the ramifications of the story are replete with sadism—murder, madness, mutilation of birds, cows, steers, a suicide, and in the end the suicide of Lance—the horrors have neither the entirely scientific presentation that would give them actuality nor the intensely emotional one that would make them vicariously exciting. The method is vacillation between the two. In spite of the magnificence of various passages, the whole therefore has the effect of a tour de force. This is so in spite of rhythms which are as vastly superb as the tides of the Pacific.

Edwin Arlington Robinson's latest narrative poem, "Talifer," gives again what we have learned to expect of Mr. Robinson: Wisdom, craftsmanship, humor. It is a smooth, pleasant tale. Neither the irrelevance nor the grandeur of Mr. Jeffers' poetry disturb it. We have Talifer, an average man, and Althea, whom he once loved. Althea, a nice, normal girl with a face "not ruinously beautiful, yet fair as a face need be to reveal a beauty that is made of more than faces, a mobile, and a multiple confusion of humor, truth and passion, and of love that outwears time." Also, there is Karen, "more like an ivory fish." Karen capriciously marries Talifer so that Althea won't have him, and Talifer discovers that an "ivory fish" doesn't make a "proliferous," nor a "domestic" wife. The triangle is as tranquilly resolved as it was constructed. There is no ugly mention of lawyers, divorce, and remarriage. We simply find Althea where Karen once was. Without any unattractive foreshadowing a young Samuel is added to the family circle. It is as replete as any fairy tale.

Althea and Talifer no doubt live happily ever afterwards, but certain characters in Mr. Robinson's brief lyrics will live beyond that theoretic bliss. And the suicide of Richard Corey, the decorous tippling of Miniver Cheevy, the heartrending stagger of Mr. Flood will still be vivid when Althea and Talifer and their young Samuel have faded into happiness forever after.

A Noted Smith Is Subject of New Biography

BY FRANK SWINNERTON.

LONDON.—[Special Correspondence.]—One of the first books to be published in London in the new year bore the odd title "The Smith of Smiths." Some may imagine that this is a fantastic novel, but it is a biography. In the eighteenth century there lived a man named Robert Smith. He was rich and handsome and he fell in love with a pretty girl. But just as he was being married to her he made up his mind to start at once for America, which he did, leaving the bride in tears. He was away for a considerable time, and then returned home, set up house with his wife, changed house every year or two, and had five children.

One of these children, the second, was the Rev. Sydney Smith, of whom King George III. said that he was "a very clever fellow, but he will never be a bishop." "The Smith of Smiths" is a biography of Sydney Smith. It is the work of Hesketh Pearson [who wrote three or four years ago a very entertaining biography of Charles Darwin's grandfather, Erasmus Darwin], and is published by Hamish Hamilton.

Smith was an extremely able man who had much to do with the passing of that reform bill of 1830 which saved England from revolution. He was also a writer of more than common talent. But it was as a talker that he was best known. At table, or with friends, he had such a flow of fun that even those who had made up their minds not to be amused by him yielded to his high spirits and laughed themselves helpless.

Queen Victoria went into fits of laughter merely upon having some of his jokes repeated to her by Lord Melbourne. Now, obviously, the jests of a jester who lived a hundred years ago may at times have a slightly musty air and too many of them would pall, but Mr. Pearson has been very adroit, and while he gives us ample examples of the sayings and writings of Sydney Smith, "The Smith of Smiths," he first of all tells the story of his life in private and in public, and shows that he was neither fool nor buffoon.

BERWYN'S MAYOR AND EX-OFFICIAL KILLED IN CRASH

Bodies Found in Creek Bed Near Pontiac.

The bodies of Mayor Frank Novotny of Berwyn and his companion, William G. Keith, 6809 Lakewood avenue, Chicago, commissioner of gas and electricity under a former Republican régime, were found yesterday in the wreckage of the mayor's automobile in a roadside creek six miles south of Pontiac.

Marks on the culvert on state highway route 4 indicated that the car had struck the bridge abutment on the left side of the road and plunged into the creek. Mayor Novotny's body lay in the creek, his head beneath the shallow water, which was coated with a thin blanket of ice. The body of Keith was sprawled on top of that of Mayor Novotny.

Returning from Peoria.

Mayor Novotny and Keith, who were returning from a business trip to Peoria, were last seen at 7 o'clock Thursday night when they stopped for dinner in Chenoa, a village ten miles south of Pontiac. A truck driver discovered the automobile in the creek at 7 o'clock yesterday morning and notified Pontiac authorities.

Mayor Novotny, who had served as mayor of Berwyn since 1931, is survived by his widow, Irene, and two children, Gladys, 23 years old, a Berwyn school teacher, and Frank Jr., 19 years old, a student at the University of Illinois.

City Clerk Jerry Jacobson will act as mayor until a temporary appointment is made by the council pending a special election which probably will be held in April, city officials said. There was some talk in the city hall of drafting Mrs. Novotny, who has been active in civic affairs, to fill her husband's position.

Miss Eitel Surrenders.

Miss Dorothy Eitel, 20 years old, 801 Linden avenue, Wilmette, daughter of Max Eitel, restaurateur, surrendered yesterday at the Evanston police station on a charge of speeding and was released on her own recognizance. Police charged that Miss Eitel fled early Thursday after the automobile in which she was riding with three other Northwestern university students struck a taxicab. She was ordered to appear in Municipal court on Jan. 31.

Ray H. Cole, 42 years old, of Gary was fatally injured yesterday when he was struck by an automobile driven by Mrs. Helen Shonfeld, wife of a Gary department store owner, in the Indiana city. Mrs. Shonfeld was charged with manslaughter and released on bond.

A suit for $70,000 damages was filed in the Lake county Circuit court at Waukegan yesterday against S. Bayard, an official of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet company. The complainants, Patrick Cahill, his wife Margaret, and their son William, alleged that they were seriously injured on Oct. 12 at Wheeling in an automobile accident caused by the reckless driving of Bayard. Bayard resides at the Deerpath inn, Lake Forest.

COPS FIND A LOT WRONG IN STORY OF CAPTIVE GIRL

The police investigated hurriedly Thursday evening when they received a telegram purporting to be signed by H. L. Alred of De Funiak Springs, Fla., stating that his daughter Elizabeth, 25 years old, was being held prisoner in a hotel by Tony Romano, owner of the Ha Ha club at 657 St. Clair street.

They discovered Miss Alred in the Devonshire hotel and arrested her. Romano was taken into custody in his club. Both were charged with disorderly conduct.

"This is silly," said Miss Alred. "Tony didn't keep me a prisoner. He just paid the rent and I stayed willingly. And father didn't send the telegram. It was sent by Mrs. Romano to make trouble for me."

Miss Alred and Romano will be arraigned in the Woman's court today.

CANADIAN BUDGET FOR 1934 PLACED AT $343,648,000

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 26.—Slashing $14,000,000 from administration costs, the Bennett government today presented its main budget estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1935. The estimates show a total decrease of $17,000,000 compared to the current year's expenditures. The figures were presented in the house of commons by E. N. Rhodes, minister of finance.

The grand total of estimated expenditure for the fiscal year 1934-'35 is $343,648,000, as compared with $360,738,000 during the current fiscal year.

Only two government departments get increases. Aviation will be voted $295,000 additional for replacement of planes, while the marine department of public works will receive an additional $1,459,000 for deepening the St. Lawrence river ship channel.

Projected public works totaling $50,000,000 will be provided for in supplementary estimates. Unemployment relief costs and the railway deficit, as usual, are not shown in today's figures.

The 10 per cent salary reduction for civil servants, members of the house of commons and senators, will be continued another year. It was estimated to have saved the treasury $8,000,000 last year.

H-Y-P Breaks Rules Again; Invites Ladies

Guests to Attend Squash Racket Matches.

BY JUDITH CASS.

"THE Harvard-Yale-Princeton club, having discovered that ladies invited within its domain behave themselves with utmost decorum, has decided to invite them to another party." So speaks one of the club's officers referring to the Saturday afternoon football luncheons last fall to which wives and best girls of members were invited. The invitations to the next party, however . . . a dinner and squash racquets match next Thursday . . . go even further than the officer in praising the ladies for they say that "the ladies do add the something that makes a party."

Nevertheless the return matches between James E. Anderson, Chicago city champion of squash racquets, and Joseph E. Jannotta, H.-Y.-P. No. 1 player, and between Ed Hanson, H.-Y.-P., and Louis Volpe, Winter club, will be very thrilling games, and the ladies attending them will probably be just as excited as their husbands and beaux.

This afternoon the club is starting a new series of educational and entertaining luncheons and lectures to be held every Saturday. Prof. William McGovern of Northwestern university is going to relate some of his amazing experiences in visiting Lhasa, the Forbidden City of Tibet. Prof. McGovern will touch on the high spots of his book, "To Lhasa in Disguise," written after his adventurous trip. To these facts he will add some other observations and points about the country.

Foster-Fetcher Nuptials Today.

Family history will play an interesting part in the wedding today of Miss Marguerite Foster, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Foster, and Leopold S. Fetcher, son of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Fetcher of Winnetka. Miss Foster is to wear the beautiful rosepoint and duchess lace veil that was used by one of Mr. Fletcher's aunts on her wedding day. She will carry her great-grandmother's lace handkerchief.

The service is to be read at 4:30 o'clock in the drawing room of the Fosters' apartment at 1362 Astor street by Dr. Norman Hutton, who has come to Chicago from his home in Wellesley, Mass., for the fortieth birthday celebration this week-end at St. Chrysostom's church. During the 20 years Dr. Hutton served St. Chrysostom's the Foster family was among his most faithful parishioners.

Miss Geraldine Foster is to be her sister's only attendant, and Stanton Fetcher will serve his brother as best man. After the wedding there is to be a reception for a few intimate friends of the two families.

Mr. Fetcher and his bride are delaying their wedding trip until later in the spring, but they will leave by motor

BY EDWARD MOORE.

As the opera season approaches its close it continues to present performances that one way or another are out of the common. This one last night was one of them. In the memory of a succession of presentations of "La Boheme," now extending close to a quarter of a century, there was one person who left the opera house last night in the firm conviction that Mr. Chamlee is about the best Rodolfo of them all.

Even the famous Caruso, glorious singer as he was, never combined the arts of singing and acting to make the character persuasive in the way that this American artist did last night. California has been getting musically famous of late years for the number of child wonders that it has produced. The western state would do well to add to the list the name of Mario Chamlee, who was born in Los Angeles.

One need not expect to hear a better singing performance of "Che gelida manina" than he gave in this opera. That the audience appreciated it to the utmost was only a deserved tribute. He is much more than a fine singer, however. He is a singing actor, with a sense of the stage, with a sense of both comedy and pathos. Here was an appealing characterization.

Once again, as has been several times happily proved this season, the opera was not the performance of a single star. One feels like marking up Miss Diano as a candidate for future honors. Her Mimi was the high spot of the several appearances she has made in Chicago, well studied, well sung, well conceived, with the extra personal quality that makes an operatic performance get over to the public.

Concerning the debutante Musetta, opinions are as yet reserved. There can be no argument that Miss Vanna has a singing voice of unusually charming character. That she has more than an incomplete acquaintance with the comic cattishness of the rôle is less certain. Mr. Trevisan's fine comedy assisted her in the second act; her own knowledge of good singing assisted her in the third. But still there was something lacking in the standards of major opera.

The "Bolero" as a prelude to the opera was quite as colorful and dramatic and exciting as before.

Museum Tours.

"Cats and Dogs" is the subject of the guide lecture tour to be presented at 3 o'clock Monday afternoon at the Field museum. On other days at the same hour subjects will be—Tuesday, "Palms and Cereals"; Wednesday, "Plant Life"; Thursday, general tour of exhibits, and Friday, "Egyptian Exhibits."

Prints Come in Black and White

Stylish Prints Put New Life in Wardrobes

BY RHEA SEEGER.

Nothing perks up a weary shopping spirit like a collection of new prints, dresses, and two three-piece costumes that will obligingly surprise the dark interior of a fur coat or the fur trimmed affair that is becoming a too intimate companion of your daily life.

Plenty of eye-filling and refreshing prints are here, ready for the double duty of reviving a jaded winter wardrobe as well as dashing about town later in the season without a coat.

Wheat prints are mighty attractive, crisp designs of wheat heads placed in interesting formation against blue, scarlet and black or brown. Big concentric circles of beige or baltic blue whirl around on dark backgrounds, small beige, white, and dusty blues and old pinks are spattered in discreetly small designs on dull raspberry red, almond green, sapphire blue and tobacco brown.

But the outstanding new prints that will make you spend your money are the sharp black and white combines that practically leave you gasping at their charm and liveliness.

Another dress of dull black has what looks like white chalk dashes over it. This, too, is slenderizing as well as different, with white dull crepe accents at the wrist and neckline.

The best looking tunic dress of the year has been unpacked. The long, almost full length tunic blouse is of white and black print; the separate skirt that shows only four or five inches below the tunic is of dull black crepe. It's positively amazing how slender this costume can make you appear, the sleeves are long, and the softly draped neckline has been cut and swathed by wizardly fingers.

Antiquarians Hold Exhibit at Art Institute

Throng Enjoys Decorative Art Treasures.

BY INDIA MOFFETT.

The president of the Antiquarian society, Mrs. Potter Palmer, and Mrs. Howard Van Doren Shaw were in line promptly at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon to receive the members and guests who were coming to the society's annual reception at the Art institute, but they shook very few hands before 4:20, for not very many arrived until after the Symphony concert.

But after the concert was over there was a steady stream of pedestrians crossing Michigan avenue from Orchestra hall to the institute and the rooms on the McKinlock court in which the Antiquarians were receiving and exhibiting decorative art treasures became crowded. The early comers had the best of it, however, for they had a chance to examine carefully the exhibitions, which were well worth long and patient study.

The architectural bits in the new Howard Van Doren Shaw memorial gallery that was being opened formally were admired particularly and the young ladies who acted as guides, Mrs. Potter Palmer III., Mrs. Oakleigh Thorne [Bertha Palmer], Miss Geraldine Swift and the Misses McCormick, Eleanor and Patty, were kept busy in there.

The first things to be seen by those at the reception were Mr. Thorne's collection of paper weights, which were in glass cases in the gallery in which Mrs. Palmer and Mrs. Shaw received. Also in this room were an exquisite christening set of the 19th century lent by Mrs. Frederick T. Haskell and consisting of a long robe, a caped wrap and a wee lace cap which looked as if it might be worn by a 1934 baby, although the dress and wrap were much longer and more ornate than modern babies wear, and a marvelous cloth of Italian 17th century gros point de Venise lace bought from the Edith Rockefeller McCormick collection and presented to the Antiquarians by an anonymous donor.

Also from the McCormick collection was a French Gothic tapestry of the 16th century which the Antiquarians bought at the recent auction and gave to the Art institute, which had had it on exhibition for several years as a loan. As the guests wandered through the galleries they saw many exquisite things, including Mrs. Frank Mulford's bead pictures, Miss Florence Bartlett's Swedish wall hangings, laces from the Martin Ryerson collection, and other articles that belong in the permanent exhibits at the institute.

A staircase, including a fireplace, a window and seat and a cupboard under the stairs that came from the home of Sir James Thornhill in Soho, London, and that was given to the institute by Mrs. Richard T. Crane Jr. and the late Mr. Crane, was particularly lovely, and every one who dreams of building an English home wished she might have it as the pièce de résistance of her house when it becomes a reality instead of a dream.

Receiving part of the time with their mother and Mrs. Palmer and also assisting at the tea table were the three Shaw daughters, Mrs. John T. McCutcheon, Mrs. Clay Judson, and Miss Theodora Shaw. They all wore black, Mrs. McCutcheon's gown relieved by a lovely collar of fine white piqué and Mrs. Judson's and Miss Shaw's by touches of silver. Mrs. Shaw also wore black and Mrs. Palmer was in the same shade of red which she wears so often and so becomingly.

The tea table fitted in perfectly with the English atmosphere of the architectural gallery, for Mrs. James Ward Thorne had brought from her own home gorgeous Georgian silver tea and coffee services, two three-branched candelabra and a huge bowl and plaque with which to decorate the table. Spring flowers filled the bowl and the effect was as formal and as elegant as English things of the Georgian era are.

Mrs. Kersey Coates Reed and Mrs. Judson poured first and then Mrs. Mulford, Mrs. George A. Ranney, Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed, and Mrs. J. Ogden Armour relieved them.

Mr. Palmer Sr. was one of the first to arrive and he stayed all afternoon, but young Mr. Palmer and Mr. Thorne did not arrive until after 5 o'clock. Mr. Judson also came early and stayed late.

Some of those who are interested in the benefit to be given for the Passavant hospital on Friday, Feb. 16, left the Antiquarian tea early to go up to Mrs. Eames MacVeagh's at 900 North Michigan avenue and hear a former member of the Russian ballet talk about the Monte Carlo ballet which is to give the benefit. Mr. MacVeagh assisted his charming little French wife in dispensing hospitality by serving cocktails and Mrs. Orville Taylor presided at the end of the table where tea was served. Mrs. Francis Johnson, president of the woman's board which is sponsoring the benefit, rushed in full of excitement because all the boxes and 500 of the tickets already are sold.

Another tea which many attended after visiting the Art institute was one at which Mrs. Jefferson Jackson and Mrs. Welch Dickinson were hostesses in their apartment on East Walton place. This was a very large party, with as many men as women at it, and every one seemed to be having a jolly time when we left at 6:30 o'clock and it gave no signs of breaking up for hours.

Dr. C. C. Little to Lecture on Control of Cancer

THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS

This morning, with some patting on the back that we hope you'll forgive, we're presenting the newest Chicago hair style of the year 1934. In the adjoining column is the very first photograph of it—and are we jubilant because it makes its bow in our column? Are we? It's as excitingly new, as fresh as the perky little white hyacinths that are just now saying "Howdy!" to spring.

This hair dress, called "Curl Coronet," was designed by the hair stylist of a boulevard beauty shop for Miss Katrina Mauff, a debutante of a couple of seasons ago. It's a softly erect coiffure, with the hair brushed BACK from the face, UP off the neck [that's the news flash], then permitted to tumble capriciously into a feminine NATURAL coronet of curls. Curls replacing pearls, so to speak.

By all indications the neckline and the hairline will be the high points of this year's hair style. The neckline must be soft, yet trim and—unconcealed. That is the effect achieved in this coiffure by the spectacular new line of the hair brushed straight up from the nape of the neck almost to the crown of the head. It says goodby to the cluster of curls at the nape; that cluster is moving up to the top of the head.

The front hairline becomes a point of interest when it is aristocratically brushed back from the face. It's that "off-the-face" line, now the theme song of hair as well as hat styles, but with its severity entirely eliminated by the cluster of ringlets.

It is a charming style for the piquant, for the youthful. And aside from its pictorial value it has distinction and spectacular NEWNESS.

Enter the "Curl Coronet," a design by a boulevard hair stylist for Miss Katrina Mauff, here photographed for the first time. The hair is brushed back from the forehead, UP off the neck and curled softly at the crown to make a feminine, natural coronet.

Front Views and Profiles

PERHAPS there are as many old men in other parts of town, but the other day we became conscious of the number of old men we saw on South Michigan avenue. First there was the old man in the elevator in the Fine Arts building, holding a crumpled hat between white, blue veined old hands, definitely an artistic type. There was gentleness and distinction in his bearing despite an air of defeat. . . . Coming around the corner of Van Buren toward Michigan was an elderly Jew with parchment-like skin and glittering black eyes. A shawl was wrapped about his shoulders, and many generations looked through the narrow eyes under the black hat brim. . . . Turning into the Congress hotel was an elderly dandy, his face pink from recent massage, his checked tweeds and the carnation in his buttonhole evidence of the desire to be youthful that obviously was uppermost in his nature. . . . Going up the steps of the Art institute, paying attention to where he put his feet, was a portly old gentleman with side whiskers. He looked prosperous, but conservative, and might possibly have had some pictures from his collection hanging on the walls of the institute. . . . Leaning against one of the stone lions was a thin old man in a coat too small for him, his lean wrists extending from the sleeves, his faded blue eyes questioning the passers-by.

OVERHEARD at the opera as the lights were dimming for the second time:

"Your father would love this. He's crazy about opera, only I can't get him to come very often. He's crazy about 'Tannhäuser' . . . it's his favorite. But the last time he heard it he fell sound asleep. . . ."

THE GOSSIP SHOP. The week was, musically speaking, the last roundup, with final performances both of opera and opera in time. . . . People who met Howard Coxe on the occasions when he visited the Kellogg Fairbanks are pleased with the success of his new book, "First Love and Last," which is written in a new form and is a kind of novel in reverse. . . . Nicholas Holmson, a charming young Russian, who married and is separated from one of New York's famous beauties, is soon to arrive in Chicago, replacing Baron Charles P. Wrangel as business representative of a large corporation. . . . Paul Gardner, head of the widely complimented new museum in Kansas City, is in town today on his way back from the east. . . . One of the numbers Herma Clark will recite during her illustrated lecture on the footlight favorites of another generation tomorrow afternoon at the Drake will be "'Osier Joe," which was considered a shocker when it was given in the elegant eighties by Mrs. James Brown Potter, mother of Mrs. Fowler McCormick. . . . And may we tell you about little Priscilla Russell, who is very careful of her clothes, "so they will be nice for the poor children"? . . . And about the woman who had read in the paper of a cocktail party a certain hostess was giving for a celebrity who approached the prospective hostess at a tea and said: "I'm just dying to meet Mr. Blank. Can I drop in at your party if I promise not to drink a single cocktail or eat a single sandwich?" . . . The present worry about the President's birthday cake for the President's birthday party at the Auditorium next Tuesday, which will be the tallest cake ever made, was voiced by Andy Rebori, who wondered, if the cake rose properly, would it go under the elevated structures when it is paraded through the loop?

* *

APROPOS all the comment about the first edition of James Joyce's "Ulysses" to be off the American press, we are reminded of the old lady who told John Reynolds that although she'd never read "Ulysses," she thought it was just wonderful that an Irishman could write Greek. . . . However, a lot of critics seem to think he does, too.

Good Morning!

L—et-tuce!
(All spell Blackmail!—you dear thing!)

For the first time on the screen, and, probably, for the first time in a breach of promise case, "creamed carrots" means "I love you!" to the plaintiff, and "spinach"—"what we did last night."

"Love, Honor and O, Baby," just escapes being a very funny movie. It is a screenization of the Howard Lindsay-Bertrand Robinson stage play "O, Promise Me," produced by Sam Harris, who also put on the musical comedy scream, "Of Thee I Sing." Note that Donald Meek, who played Vice President Throttlebottom in the latter named opus, has a featured role in this movie.

Slim Summerville is seen as a shyster lawyer who specializes in breach of promise suits and ambulance chasing. His fiancée, Miss Zasu Pitts, drums up business for him.

In order that the two may be financially able to wed, the pair frame Zasu's boss, a banker with a penchant for taking his filing clerks on week-end trips to Rochester. Mr. Ogden is a vegetarian. . . .!

The cute part about this picture is that all of the principals are crooked. At no time, you see, can you feel sorry for anybody. Which is a great rest to your sympathies.

For a while the piece moves slowly; but it picks up toward the middle, and, after a while, springs a genuine and mirth provoking surprise.

The playing is all to the good, and some of the dialogue is funny. I think a lot more could have been made of the story material than has been done—but then I'm always thinking things.

See you tomorrow.

THE WILD BIRD

By OWEN JOHNSON

SYNOPSIS.

Barbara Brawne, aged 22, is completely dominated by an adoring, though jealous father, who is against every modern idea and improvement. Lynwood, their home, is in the prim and proper village of Oxbridge, a place of intellectual sanctity. Barbara seems predestined to join the ranks of the village spinsters. She contemplates rebellion. Gregory Rance, popular novelist, is visiting her cousin, Laurie Chilwick. They are mutually attracted. Barbara overhears Rance asking Laurie about her. He says she is the sort of girl he'd want to marry. Laurie leaves and Barbara makes her presence known to Rance. She asks him to marry her.

INSTALLMENT XII.

MARRIAGE PRO AND CON.

"But what do you know of me?" Rance said slowly. "You've lived a sheltered, cloistered life. In many ways you are a child—a delicately sensitive child ——"

Barbara shook her head.

"In experience at least ——"

"Wait. There is the experience which is contact with people, but isn't there also another experience that can come where there is imagination and curiosity, and you sit and watch what is going on, particularly when you are thrown back on yourself and your thoughts."

"Still ——"

"Listen. You think you are talking to an unformed girl. You are not. I am a woman, very much of a woman. I have read everything, experienced everything if only in my imagination. I am not as you think a formal traditional person with rigid standards and prejudices. Every one—my father even—thinks this is so. But it isn't. I am shy, distrustful of myself, yes. I could never talk like this to any one but you. But in my real, my secret self, I am all curiosity and understanding. I am eager for life ——"

"And in your imagination can you comprehend what a man like myself is?" he said amused. "I am going to be just as fair as you. How do I know myself? If I marry now, I might immediately resent the fact that my liberty is curtailed."

"Why should it be?"

"Barbara, it couldn't help being so."

"True of the ordinary marriage. But this is quite extraordinary. I am taking the chance because to me it would be the most intensely interesting experience, and I am making the conditions. You are to have complete liberty, to go, to come, to do whatever you wish——"

"But——"

"You think I couldn't hold to it. In that case—if I feel you are restless or unhappy I promise you again I shall slip away—quietly." She smiled. "There won't even be the classic parting scene. There now."

"The fear of hurting you would always be there," he said meditatively.

"Will you please stop thinking of me!" she cried sharply. "Haven't I the right to know what I want? Don't you think I have thought over all that I have to fear? And please remember," she said, laughing, "that you have very little to do with this. All the responsibility is on me."

"All the same, you don't know——"

"Passion is hope. Love is knowledge."

"What an awful chance I'd be taking? I certainly do. If you marry me I'm going to make a success of it. But if it only lasts a year, it will compensate for everything."

"You're a very determined young lady," he said grimly. "You propose to go into marriage as you'd set out to settle in South Africa."

"I'm terribly in earnest," she said nodding, "and now the whole point is do you want to marry any one at present?"

"That is the point." He laughed. "Well, you certainly play fair."

"Because as far as I'm concerned I am the wife for you. You knew that at once."

"When?"

"At the station when we met, and you laughed and said 'A queer idea just came into my head.' Well, I knew then what you were thinking."

"All right! Now that you've got yourself into this," he cried with his rumbling laugh, "I'm going to take every advantage of my position. In my place would you marry Barbara Brawne?"

"O, that's a very difficult question," she said, shaking her head.

"An honest answer?"

"Yes."

"That's Barbara Brawne answering!"

"You are thirty?"

"Thirty-two."

"And you've roamed about, how long?"

"Pretty much since fifteen."

"Is it a phase or a means to an end?"

"A little of both."

"No, it is a phase," she said decidedly. "What you want now is to produce, to make live what you have seen."

"What I want now is to keep away from sophisticated people," he took up warmly. "I like to come back and dip into the maelstrom a moment and then fly off again. If I become self-conscious, sophisticated, tamed, I shall lose my flavor. Damn it, I won't sit around in parlors and talk about what I've done! I want to be out and doing."

"Don't you?"

"Gregory, I do not!" she cried, her eyes flashing. "That's just the point. You didn't have to tell me the life you need. I knew it. If you wanted to be a parlor genius you wouldn't have attracted me. If you were that kind I never could have talked to you as I did. I don't want to tame you—I won't have you tamed! I'll go with you anywhere. I'll share anything you want with you and when I can't, I'll wait for you to come back."

"And if other women ——"

"But I expect that—it's a question of temperaments."

"Yes, but if I should become so infatuated that I never wanted to return ——"

She thought a long moment, staring through the woods.

"I would take it as a part of life. Yes, really. Do you think I am afraid of suffering? No. I am so horribly afraid of having nothing to suffer!"

"You're a queer little duck," he said, studying her.

"Because I have sentiment you think I am sentimental," she continued, smiling. "Well, I'm capable of looking things straight in the face. I've watched what goes on about me. This thing they call love isn't love at all. It never is ——"

"What is it then?"

She thought a moment.

"It is simply the waking to passion. You don't know—you hope. Because you feel so strongly you want to idealize everything! O, yes, true—that is what is in me also. Do you think it strange that I should say that? But I am like any other woman, I have need of feeling, tremendous needs, and passion is instinct. We don't reason about it. It is ——"

"Chemical," he said, nodding. "Then you don't believe in love?"

"How absurd! Every one believes in love. But how many know what it is. When two people have lived together a long while and find they need each other—that is love. Passion is hope, love is knowledge."

"You are full of surprises," he said, meditating on what she had said.

"Inconsistencies you mean? I suppose so. I have a foot in either generation. I have been looking out and waiting. You should understand all that means."

He shook his head.

"I'm beginning to understand, and yet I can't help wondering if you are what you think you are."

"O, dramatizing myself, you mean? I was waiting for that!"

"I'm trying to see you in the test of actual conditions. I'm trying to readjust you in the light of what you've told me."

Every Marriage Budget Should Include Play

BY DORIS BLAKE.

She's 23, her husband 28. She knows he loves her, earns good money, saves all he can, has no bad habits. But he is too conservative, as she calls it. He objects to her stepping out nights with the crowd with which she used to attend dances. Recently there was a terrific row because she dashed off to one of the night clubs, leaving him a note where she had gone.

"I could have been found there," she argues. "I did nothing indiscreet. He knows I wouldn't. I got home late and he was sitting up sore as a boiled owl and called me names that I can't forgive!"

That's the difficulty with a flighty 23 marrying a staid and sober 28. Twenty-three is a bit young to sit home night after night playing the settled down rôle. If husband could be persuaded that a certain amount of fun must be incorporated into the living budget things would be better for all concerned. Marrying a woman five years his junior he must realize that she's still a very young person in need of young amusement. And dancing, when it means what it does to so many women of this age, should be on the amusement calendar. The husband should learn to dance no matter how hard a compromise it might appear to be, so that one evening a week, at least, the young wife might be given a chance to enjoy herself. Then, he is in a position to ask compromises of her. Besides, a man of 28 should not let himself become so immersed in the business of saving pennies as to cut himself off from social contact. Save, of course, but spend, too. And spend for a little fun in life. Otherwise one becomes a dull and stodgy individual and, as success rules are dictated today, contacts are invaluable.

The young wife, of course, must understand that she is not the free gadabout of former days. There is some one else to be considered now. If she wants to make a go of her marriage that some one else has to be considered, too. But it's no great trick to wheedle a mate into compromising with you, on one point, if you're willing to do something nice for him in return.

H-Y-P Breaks Rules Again; Invites Ladies

Guests to Attend Squash Racket Matches.

tonight for Cincinnati, where Mr. Fetcher's family originally lived and where they are now to make their home.

An interesting wedding that takes place at Noroton, Conn., this morning, and in which Thomas C. Dennehy Jr. and G. Corson Ellis of Lake Forest will usher, is the marriage of Miss Emilie Hill, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hogarth Hill of Ox Ridge Lane, formerly of Evanston and Cleveland, to James A. Farrell Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. James A. Farrell of Rockledge, Hickory Bluff, South Norwalk, Conn.

The Rev. W. Coleman Nevils, head of Georgetown university, assisted by the Rev. James McGuane, rector of St. John's Roman Catholic church, will perform the ceremony in that church at 11:30 o'clock, and a wedding breakfast for 200 will follow immediately afterward at the Wee Burn club.

Mrs. John A. Spoor is giving a luncheon at the Casino tomorrow noon for her daughter and son-in-law, the Thornhill Broomes who are here from their home in Pass Christian, Miss. Mrs. Broome is the former Caryl Spoor.

Society to Attend Final Opera Tonight.

The young women who are to collect subscription blanks at the opera tonight had planned that their husbands or beaux would spend the evening at the Empire room of the Palmer house, where the women would join them after the opera. Much to the surprise of the young women the men decided, however, that they would enjoy "Mignon," so they are going to occupy several boxes at the Civic Opera house and later they all will go to the Empire room to dance and have supper.

Contrary to the general notion that Saturday night is not society night at the opera, the box tiers and main floor will glisten tonight as a fitting climax to the successful five weeks' opera season.

A special committee has assisted Mrs. Bartholomay Osborne with the sale of boxes with the result that they're practically all sold. Of course the bill is the major attraction, for Tito Schipa and Coe Glade are singing "Mignon."

Mr. and Mrs. John F. Jelke are giving a dinner-dance tonight at the Racquet club for Miss Peggy Hixon. The Jelkes have invited forty-five of the young crowd and Miss Hixon's parents, the Robert Hixons, and one or two older couples to dine and dance.

Many of the younger married set will be at the Saddle and Cycle club this evening dining and dancing at another of the club's Saturday night parties.

The Studebaker theater is sold out for the performance of "Peter Pan," by the Junior league this morning. The curtain will rise at 10:30.

Lecture on Jungle in Town Hall Series.

The romance and fascination of the South American jungle will be brought to an audience of society folk this morning when Julian Duguid gives an illustrated program at the Drake hotel. The lecture is another in the popular Saturday morning Town Hall series.

Mrs. Charles B. Goodspeed has invited eighteen friends to meet her and Mr. Goodspeed at the Arts club tomorrow evening to have supper with Stephen Graham and to hear him lecture about "Famous Men and Women I Have Known in Paris." Mr. Huddleston is a foreign correspondent for the Christian Science Monitor and is the author of numerous books. Several others are to entertain guests at the buffet supper.

Janet Fairbank to Sing with Orchestra.

Another distinction has come the way of young Janet Fairbank. Tomorrow afternoon she is to make her first nonoperatic appearance as a soloist, singing with the Civic orchestra at its first concert of the season in Orchestra hall. Eric DeLamarter will be the conductor.

Miss Fairbank was asked to sing by Frederick Stock, the veteran symphony conductor, after he had heard her in the modern numbers of her choice. They are the Cradle Song from the opera, "The Treasure Seeker," by the modern German composer, Franz Schrecker, and two songs by the young Austrian modernist, Erich Korngold.

The Civic orchestra, membership in which is through competitive examination only, is composed of the most talented young musicians in the city. It was organized by Dr. Stock 15 years ago and since then has remained one of his favorite ventures.

Almost as much of an attraction as the programs themselves are the settings the Chicago Drama league is choosing for its Sunday candlelight salons. Tomorrow afternoon the league is to have the second of these intimate and popular gatherings at 5 o'clock at the handsome residence of Mrs. Fortunato Jerace at 3030 Lake Shore drive.

Mrs. Jerace's daughter, Mrs. Sidney S. Gorham Jr. [Corinne McVoy], is to be the hostess.

Herma Clark Will Lecture Tomorrow.

Older members of society will gather at 3:30 tomorrow afternoon at the Drake hotel to hear Herma Clark's illustrated story, "Footlight Favorites of Yesterday." And as soon as the guests enter the ballroom they will start matching their memories with the interesting list of questions that Miss Clark has had printed on the canary colored programs. She plans to answer them in her lecture.

Friends of Miss Clark have been very generous in loaning her pictures and other mementos to make the story illustration complete. Mrs. William J. Chalmers, for instance, has given her a photograph of Sir Charles Wyndham, who was a long time friend of the Chalmers family. Mrs. E. V. L. Brown has loaned a book that belonged to Mary Anderson of Victorian stage fame, and Mrs. Frederick T. Haskell, a letter written to her by a great aunt describing Jenny Lind's first concert in America.

Only Relatives

At 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the flower filled, candle lighted drawing room of the William M. Collins apartment on State parkway, their daughter, Miss Kathryn Collins, exchanged wedding vows with Robert J. Graf Jr., son of the Robert J. Grafs of Woodlawn avenue.

The bride wore an ankle length gown of brown stiffened chiffon, made simply with a girdle of brown and silver and long sleeves. Her off the face satin hat matched the dress in color and she carried a muff of gardenias and white orchids.

Just the immediate families—the bride's and the groom's parents and the bride's sister, and brother-in-law, the Paul McNultys, and her brother, William M. Collins Jr., and the bridegroom's sister, Miss Barbara Graf—were present at the marriage ceremony and for the dinner afterward. The new Mr. and Mrs. Graf left for Arizona and California last night to spend the rest of the winter.

Open Gallery as Memorial to Architect

BY ELEANOR JEWETT.

A new gallery, in memory of the late Howard Van Doren Shaw, was opened yesterday in the Art Institute. Mr. Shaw was the architect of the Goodman theater, and that, with its beauty of proportion and line and the exquisite simplicity of its interior, will remain his finest memorial. Yet it is a graceful gesture on the part of the museum to establish a definite part of the institution in which he played a most helpful part during his life as distinctly the Howard Van Doren Shaw gallery.

Mr. Shaw, up to the time of his death in 1926, was a trustee of the Art institute and one time chairman of the decorative arts committee. After his death his friends and associates created a fund with the intention of some sort of architectural memorial to him in mind. David Adler and Robert Allerton were appointed to plan and select and develop the project. Owing to their discriminating judgment the Art institute now has a valuable collection of English and American provenance constituting the Shaw gallery.

The nucleus of the collection is, perhaps, the old shop front removed from Market place, in Faversham, Kent, near London. One of the English doorways is from 179 Lower Clapham road, London, and dates from about 1700. From Lombard street, London, comes another doorway, this of the Corinthian order. Flanking it is a section of the original spearhead iron rail, adding interest to the composition. A third doorway is from an American house near Bethlehem, Pa., built in 1819.

To the north and south of the main gallery smaller rooms contain interior details of buildings affiliated with the Shaw memorial but presented by private donors.

Cora Bliss Taylor opens an exhibition of her recent paintings in the Allerton gallery at 4 o'clock tomorrow with a talk on "Forty Years of Modern Art."

The Renaissance society of the University of Chicago is holding to Feb. 2 an exhibit of abstract paintings by Picasso, Gris, Braque and Leger in Wieboldt hall.

BY MARY MEADE.

"Bubble, bubble, toil and trouble."

And there's a kitchen slogan for you that seems to apply pat to quantities of even the food wisest folks these days. So if you're a struggling bachelorette or bride, hearten up—older heads than yours are puzzled daily because the cake shrugs its shoulders, the sprouts turn brown, the lemon pie weeps, and the custard curdles.

Which reminds me to remark that it isn't what we do know that marks us as brainy meal getters, but how soon we find out the answers to the things we don't know. And, since this department at THE TRIBUNE seems to be a good clearing house for troubles, may I reinvite you, for 1934, to write or call us whenever a kitchen problem gets out of hand, and let us tell you our experience on that particular point in kitcheneering?

So now up and at the pile of questions come this week. First, from Mrs. H. R. D., who asks: "What can be the cause of the knobs that always seem to push themselves out of the top edge of my muffins? It gives them such a lop-sided look."

Yes, doesn't it? But it's not necessary, for it's a very loud announcement that you simply stirred the muffin batter too much in mixing. You've also likely noticed that your baked-out muffin had tunnels in it lengthening out toward the side of the bump. The top is also unpleasantly smooth. The answer is that for perfect muffins the liquids should be rushed all at once into the mixed dry ingredients and stirred swiftly, with only sufficient strokes to dampen the flour and such. No, I didn't say make a smooth batter. Just dampen the dry ingredients. Then stop. Pour the batter into the tins. It will be slightly bump, giving a pebbled, evenly rounded top, with good height and no large holes or tunnels in the finished muffin.

Next, a bit of a query from Miss D. L. regarding lobsters bought in cans. She writes us: "Why is it that sometimes I buy canned lobster which is pure white, while other times the meat is grayish?" The reason she is seeking is that it all depends upon where the lobster is caught. If he was a resident of the muddy bottoms near shore the meat has a slightly grayish tinge, while if he spent his time in the clear water on a sandy or gravel bottom the meat will be white. Either kind is edible.

Then a what-is-it question. This one comes from J. H. R., who is asking about "cepes." These, Mr. R., are wild mushrooms grown in France, where they seem to turn up most often in chestnut groves.

And lastly a cake sticker. "Just what," S O S's Mrs. K. T., "is the cause of a heavy streak at the bottom of my sponge cake?"

The facts of the case are, Mrs. T., that either the flour was damp, the oven too cool, there were too many egg yolks in the recipe, not enough beating of the egg yolks, or they were not sufficiently mixed with the sugar. To prevent this use a tested recipe, beat the egg yolks until they are thick and light yellow, blend them very thoroughly until all the sugar has dissolved, sift damp flour several times before the open door of a hot oven, and bake in a moderately slow oven (325 degrees F.).

And, by the way, since such cake difficulties as this are constantly turning up, we have just brought forth a new booklet, "Baking the Perfect Cake," in which, in 56 busy pages, we've done our best to give answers to all these cake posers, the whys of cake failures and their remedies, the proper method for turning out that perfect cake every time, and lastly a section of fifty tested cake and frosting recipes. Twenty-three cents in stamps or coin is the price if you write to Mary Meade, Tribune Tower, Chicago. Or secure the booklet for 20 cents by calling at The Tribune Public Service office, 1 South Dearborn street.

Business Girl Must Exercise to Keep Beauty and Figure

BY ANTOINETTE DONNELLY.

One of my co-workers was running breathlessly the other evening to catch a car in order to get to her exercise class on time. She had just finished work. She takes these lessons three times a week. She tells me that, with six weeks of it already to her credit, she feels as she has not felt since she was nineteen.

A half dozen times lately I've been told by young women, all of them in business, of their exercise doings. It's good news, indeed, that the exercise fever is catching on with young business women. The enthusiasm is what I like. Not short lived enthusiasm, either, since, with one exception, these young women have been constant in their gym or exercise class for months and months. The exception has but lately caught the fever and she is applying herself daily to my stretching series, done mornings before breakfast.

The work is sedentary, and sedentary workers are prone to certain health and beauty difficulties. Notoriously large are the number of constipation sufferers among sedentary workers. Any physician will confirm this statement. From this ailment grow just countless numbers of ills that affect the looks, as you know. Then, too, there is the chair spread to be battled against for the silhouette's sake. It's upon a girl before she knows what's happened to her former symmetrical figure. There's the bent over shoulder position of work that can be offset only with muscles trained to an upright position. So, it is the best investment a girl can make to tie herself in on some exercise program for this coming year.

Old Favorites Sing Again in 'Student Prince'

BY CHARLES COLLINS.

"The Student Prince," the operetta that has made an unusual amount of history for the American stage, continues to add to its pleasant traditions. Yesterday it began a week's engagement in the Chicago theater on a schedule of four performances a day, with practically the same cast and settings that figured in its revival in the Grand Opera house last spring.

Although now a "presentation" in connection with a cinema program, offered in an auditorium that is capable of seating 5,000 and usually does for twelve hours a day, this is the same old, and yet always young, "Student Prince." The only change that the experienced eye observes is the use of the tavern setting of the first act for the interior scene of the second act—Karl Franz's room as a Heidelberg student. This adjustment, however, does not alter the course or atmosphere of the story.

Allan Jones, voted last year the best of the several tenors who have appeared in the rôle of the royal student whose collegiate romance is halted by his duty to the state, leads this company. His caroling of the serenade—"Nothing is heard but the song of a bird," etc.—has its customary charm. He is an easy and graceful singer of numbers over which the typical operetta tenor would knit his brows and strain his pipes.

Gertrude Lang, who has the trimmest waistline and biggest voice of all the Kathies in "Student Prince" history, is the prima donna. George Hassell brings his unique vein of comic impersonation to the rôle of the snobbish Herr Lutz. All of the other characters are in the hands of players to whom "The Student Prince" is almost second nature.

This engagement of "The Student Prince" represents an almost complete transplantation of a legitimate theatrical production into the field of four-a-day mixed bills. The fine orchestra at the Chicago gives a rapturous interpretation of Sigmund Romberg's luscious score.

Parents Should Pause Before They Discipline

BY GLADYS HUNTINGTON BEVANS.

"When you're mad, count ten before you answer," is a little piece of advice that used to be given us when we were children. Paraphrased a little, it's a good piece of advice for parents. When the children do something they shouldn't—when they have done something that irritates or annoys you—count ten before you scold or correct.

That will accomplish several things. The pause may make you realize that they don't need correcting at all. Or perhaps they have only done something that slightly inconveniences you. That count of ten will almost surely keep you from scolding, or punishing, or from being unjust.

But if you do need to correct or deny or to divert energy into new channels it will help you to do so in the right way. And last—that ten count will save you from remorse. For I don't know of any feeling that hurts more than the regret you feel when you have been unkind or unfair to your little son or daughter who commits all his or her misdemeanors in ignorance. This pause is most necessary for those parents who are naturally quick tempered or impatient.

HAWTHORNE TRACK NAMES SABATH PRESIDENT

NORTH AMERICA SKATING MEET STARTS TODAY

15,000 Expected at Oconomowoc.

Oconomowoc, Wis., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—One hundred and ten of the fastest ice skaters of Canada and the United States will open competition tomorrow on Lake Fowler for the speed skating championship of North America. A crowd of 15,000 is expected tomorrow and a similar attendance is likely for the finals on Sunday afternoon.

Ten individual titles in four divisions are at stake in the 15 final events on tomorrow's program. With the preliminaries, thirty races will comprise the program. Among the entrants are the best talent from New York, Ohio, Michigan, Missouri, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Canada.

With more than fourteen inches of ice on Lake Fowler there is no possibility of postponements.

Schroeder Among Favorites.

Favorites for the men's championship are Eddie Schroeder of Chicago, 10,000 meter champion of the world and holder of two records; Bill Logan of St. Johns, N. B., Can., member of the dominion's Olympic team; Herb Flack of Toronto, Jim Webster of St. Paul, 1932 and 1934 national champion; Bert Taylor, New York; and Eddie Wedge of Detroit. Taylor and Wedge were members of the American team with Schroeder last year when Schroeder won his world titles in Europe.

The dark horse entries are Lamar Ottsen, St. Louis; Allan Potts, Brooklyn; Mel Johnson, Minneapolis; Bob Ocock of Racine, Wis.; Storms Arnold, Detroit; Bob Peterson, Milwaukee; Wilbur Marks and Eddie Stundl of Chicago. Al Kucera of Chicago will be the main threat in the distance events.

Women's Race Open.

The women's championship is a free-for-all. Leila Brooks-Potter of Toronto, Can., the defending champion, is holding a slight edge over Dorothy Franey of St. Paul, newly crowned 1934 champion who has been breaking records consistently. Kit Klein of Buffalo, N. Y., and Elizabeth Du Bois of Chicago are strong contenders.

Pretty Edith Kingsmill of Winnipeg has been the most impressive in her practice rounds. Edith is making her first appearance in this country. Flossie Hurd has been trained for the last three years by her brother Alex and may play an important rôle.

Those who saw Leo Freisinger of Chicago take the national championship in the intermediate division last Sunday, breaking four records and tying one in doing so, think he will again steal the show. He has a dangerous rival in Orel Duffy, Canadian youngster. The junior favorites are Richard Beard of Minneapolis, holder of the 220 yard dash mark, and Robert Sherman of Chicago, holder of the 440 yard dash record.

220 yard North American championship for men.
880 yard North American championship for men.
1 mile North American championship for men.
2 mile North American championship for men.
220 yard North American championship for women.
½ mile North American championship for women.
220 yard dash North American intermediate championship.
220 yard North American junior championship.
220 yard for juvenile boys.
440 yard for women.
220 yard dash for girls under 18.

GEHRIG SIGNS 1934 CONTRACT; TO GET $23,000

New York, Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Lou Gehrig, Yankee first baseman, who broke all endurance records last season, called on Business Manager Ed Barrow this afternoon with Russell Van Atta, the young left handed pitcher, and both signed contracts for 1934.

Gehrig's early signing, occasioned no surprise, as it was announced some time ago that he already had come to terms. In fact, it was disclosed then that Gehrig had reached a 1934 salary agreement when he signed a one year contract for $23,000 last year.

The understanding was that he would receive the same stipend for 1934. This is a $2,000 drop from Lou's top salary of $25,000 which he drew in 1932.

In the general slashing of baseball wages last winter, in which Ruth's toppled from $75,000 to $52,000, the Yanks also sought to perform a major operation on Gehrig's figures. He held out stubbornly until March, when he finally won his two year agreement, although he did not sign for that full period as the Yankees have an ironclad rule against more than one year contracts.

Gehrig's outstanding achievement last year was the shattering of the major league consecutive games record of 1,307.

In the WAKE of the NEWS

EARLIER CHICAGO.

DEAR WAKE: Recent article in your column reminds me of a reception tendered by actor friends in Chicago at the time to W. C. Couldock, English actor who supported Charlotte Cushman in her first tour of the United States. It was held at Frank Harrington's place, State and Jackson, when the actor was filling an engagement at McVicker's about 1863-'64. Sons of Monroe and Harrington were my schoolmates at the old Dearborn school and told me who were there.

Besides Frank Harrington and Frank Monroe, there were J. H. McVicker, Sam Myers, brother-in-law of McVicker and his partner in the theater; Ben Jennings, retired circus clown who operated a restaurant at Madison and Dearborn; Joseph Jefferson, who married Henry Warren's youngest daughter [Warren was a noted Boston comedian]; Robert Fergus, printer and old time friend of Couldock who helped finance the first CHICAGO TRIBUNE, edited by Judge Ryan. Ryan afterward became judge of the Wisconsin Supreme court. There also were many others whose names I have forgotten. "'52."

In the early '90s Chicago's favorite place of amusement during the hot summer months was the roof garden theater, where lovers of comedy gathered. There were two large roof gardens at the time. One was on the Masonic temple, loftiest building in the city. The other was atop the Great Northern hotel building, another "skyscraper" of the day.

Performances consisted of vaudeville acts. Refreshments, according to order, were served during the performances. So penthouse night clubs aren't so new after all. M. L.

Culver, Page & Hoyne, stationers in the '70s, were succeeded in the early '80s by John Morris, on Monroe street next to Haverly's. It was the leading store in its line at the time.

One day in the absence of Mr. Morris the boiler started for the sky via the private office, leaving a sad wreck. Among the new fixtures installed during repairs was a steam gauge in the private office on which much attention was lavished thereafter by the entire staff. Stonewall.

Little Road.

A little road we found one night
After the sun was down?
And do you recall the moon we watched
There in the midnight sky?
No one was there but the wind and moon,
The stars . . . and you . . . and I.

And we lingered there for a little while
And the world seemed far away,
And we talked of our love and you promised me
That you'd return . . . some day.
Now the little road lies lone and still
And my heart is numb with pain,
But we'll wait, the little road and I,
Until you come again. . . .

MICHIGAN'S 2D HALF OUTBREAK BEATS OHIO 32-28

Revamped Wolverines Get Results.

Ann Arbor, Mich., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Michigan's basketball team tonight whipped Ohio State, 32 to 28, for its second Big Ten conference victory.

After trailing, 16 to 12, at the half, Michigan's revamped squad leaped ahead in the first four minutes of the second period and never was overtaken. Michigan tallied 14 points in the second half before Ohio put through a field goal.

Petoskey, captain, and Jablonski, center, led in the scoring for Michigan, each chalking up three field goals. Whitlinger, Buckeye forward, was high point man of the evening with five field goals and one tally from the foul line. Score:

N. U. AT MINNESOTA

Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Northwestern's Wildcats, holders of third place in the Big Ten conference, will seek their fifth victory of the campaign against Minnesota in the only conference game scheduled for tomorrow night. It will be their second meeting, the Wildcats having defeated the Gophers, 33 to 26, at Evanston on Jan. 8.

Northwestern comes to Minneapolis as the favorite. Led by Center Live Fisher, who is the highest scorer in the conference, the Wildcats have shown steady improvement.

The Wildcats will start the combination of Brewer and Kopecky at forwards; Manske and Culver at guards; and Fisher at center. Kawal, who returned to the squad after recovering from football injuries, also may see action.

Culver against Ohio State last week, broke through the Buckeye's defense to score seven baskets and three free throws. He and Fisher are counted upon to lead the Wildcats to another victory.

MAROONS VS. WHEATON

The University of Chicago basketball team will meet its second non-conference opponent of the week tonight when it plays Wheaton college in the Midway fieldhouse.

Wheaton has one of the strongest teams in the Little Nineteen conference. The quintet won five out of nine games on its holiday tour of the east, and has won ten out of 16 games played. The Wheaton starting line-up averages over 6 feet; Steward Newsom, a 6 foot 3 inch guard, being the biggest man. Capt. Frank Lawrence and Robert Glover are Wheaton's highest scorers, averaging 10 points a game. Lawrence was high point man in the Little Nineteen conference last year.

Lake Shore Girls Triumph in Swim Meet

The girls' triangular swimming meet between the Milwaukee, Indianapolis, and Lake Shore Athletic clubs, as well as several men's invitation championships and diving exhibitions, were run, or, rather, splashed off last night at the Lake Shore Athletic club pool.

The young ladies representing the Lake Shore A. C. swam away with the honors of the evening. There were so many mermaids dashing back and forth in the tank it was difficult to keep track of them, but a final check revealed that no one was missing at the close of the contests.

The 300 yard medley relay for men was the most exciting race of the evening, and when Mr. Cornelius popped up like a seal at the end of it the audience was frantic.

Marion Mansfield demonstrated her diving superiority, but Elmyra Holmdohl, Milwaukee A. C., and Betty Clemons, Indianapolis A. C., forced her to attempt her most intricate aerial evolutions in order to hold first place.

POND TO TAKE HEAD FOOTBALL POST AT YALE

Report Oosterbaan Will Be Assistant.

Ducky Pond has been appointed head coach of the Yale football team, it was authoritatively learned by THE TRIBUNE last night. The informant was a Chicagoan who had received the word from Malcolm Farmer, director of athletics at Yale.

From the same source it was stated that Bennie Oosterbaan, one of Michigan's greatest athletes and at present an assistant to Harry Kipke at Ann Arbor, has been named end coach at New Haven.

Expect Confirmation Soon.

Confirmation from Yale is expected this week-end. Selection of Pond, a star back field player at Yale ten years ago, as head coach ends weeks of speculation as to the successor to Reggie Root, who took charge of the Elis after the resignation of Dr. Mal Stevens a year ago. The list of candidates included almost every one except King Levinsky and One Eyed Connolly.

Oosterbaan will be associated at Yale with another Michigan man, Ivan Williamson, former end, whose appointment to the freshman staff was announced two weeks ago.

Harry Kipke, who had been mentioned prominently for the Yale job, will remain at Michigan at least another year, Director Fielding H. Yost announced yesterday.

Pond, hero of the Yale-Harvard games of 1923 and 1924, both of which were played in quagmires with rain pouring down upon the football men and spectators throughout the play, has been associated with professional, semi-professional and Yale football since his graduation and is well liked by Yale men generally. His background, however, is the disappointing Yale football of the last ten years and none knows what ideas he will bring to the game or whether he has the qualifications essential for the rehabilitation of Yale's gridiron system.

Star in Baseball, Too.

Pond was Yale's most successful football half back before his graduation in 1925. He was a first string pitcher of the baseball team, which he captained in his senior year. Following his graduation he served for a time as athletic instructor at the Hotchkiss school in Lakeville, Conn., where his family resides.

In baseball, he was the pitching mainstay for the Blue games with Princeton and Harvard and in 1923 and 1924 his work contributed to Yale's victory over both rivals in their series.

NEALE PRO COACH?

Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 26.—(AP)—President Art Rooney of the Pittsburgh Pirates' professional football team revealed tonight that Coach Earle Neale of West Virginia has tentatively agreed to coach the local club next year, but that he is also negotiating with Yale authorities.

"Neale set his terms for coaching the Pirates in 1934 some time ago," Rooney said.

"We have already accepted his proposition. Then yesterday he informed me of the chance to go to Yale as an assistant coach and asked a delay in making his final selection until some time on Saturday.

"He has not signed a contract with the Pirates and if he prefers the college post we will just forget about it and procure another leader."

JANUARY 26, ANY YEAR, LUCKY FOR MRS. GENSBURG

AGUA CALIENTE, Mexico, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Mrs. L. W. Gensburg of Chicago, a winter visitor, has a lucky star that shines on Jan. 26, even if it does not shine on other days.

A year ago this afternoon Mrs. Gensburg cashed a ticket on one of the longest daily double payoffs at the Agua Caliente Jockey club track here, receiving $865 for $2.

This afternoon she bought a ticket on Moresure to win the fourth race. Nothing could be surer for Mrs. Gensburg. Moresure won and paid the biggest price so far this meeting—$524 on each $2 mutuel ticket. Mrs. Gensburg had the only winning ticket which appeared after the race. The place price on Moresure was $14. The filly paid $8 to show.

REWARDED FOR GETTING LEGAL RACE BETTING

McHale and Bidwill Also Elected.

BY FRENCH LANE.

A young man who had much to do with the return of horse racing in Chicago to a place where it outranks the turf sport in any other state in America was rewarded yesterday.

His name is Albert Sabath, an attorney who has just turned 40, and a son of Judge Joseph Sabath of the Superior court. His reward was the presidency of the Chicago Business Men's Racing association which controls the Hawthorne race track in Chicago, one of the oldest and most prosperous turf properties in the country.

He was elevated to the post held for several years by the late John Schank, a two fisted turf ruler, who took up where the fiery Ed Corrigan had left off 20 years earlier and who guided the affairs of Hawthorne until his sudden death last June.

Gets Favorble Ruling.

It was ten years ago, almost to the day, when Sabath, then at the start of his law practice, arranged to represent a group of Chicagoans who had gained control of the stock in the Hawthorne track. He went into the courts and sought a ruling on the legality of the oral forms of betting. Horse racing and wagering on horse races, except for spasmodic attempts at revivals, had been dormant for more than 20 years.

In a hearing on a test case before Judge William C. Lindsay, the court ruled that oral betting in which no money was passed on the premises of the track was not a violation of the Illinois gambling laws.

Racing came back to Hawthorne under oral betting. It floundered from time to time because Chicagoans were not familiar with oral betting or at least many of them claimed to be ignorant of the workings of the new system.

Forget to Settle Up.

Occasionally a fellow would bet and lose $10,000 in an afternoon in "markers", and then would forget to payoff on a downtown street corner the next day. Some bookmakers pleaded "ignorance of the system" and didn't settle up with their lucky clients away from the track.

But racing continued, and after the oral system of wagering was about to turn over and let out its final gasp and the tracks in the state were ready to drop out of the picture, Sabath led the fight which brought a favorable court ruling on the certificate form of wagering. This was modified pari-mutuel betting.

When the state lawmakers discovered there was no way to stop racing and wagering on the outcome of the contests, they legalized the sport and at the same time legalized pari-mutuel wagering. It brought in an annual revenue of about three-quarters of a million dollars in taxes and license fees.

Millions Invested in Racing.

Since Sabath, the young attorney, fought and won the case which made wagering on horse races run in Illinois legal, millions of dollars have been invested in race track property here. Other hundreds of thousands have been invested in breeding farms and in breeding stock. No tracks in the country have offered more attractive programs, and the Arlington Park Jockey club's meeting has come to be regarded as the annual meeting place between champions from the east and the west, while the Hawthorne Gold Cup has for a number of years decided the handicap championship of America.

Although it has been hinted that most of the principal stockholders were ambitious to succeed the late Mr. Schank as the Hawthorne president, Sabath's name was the only one placed in nomination yesterday. This might have been due to the fact that the stock owned by Schank was purchased recently by friends of Sabath.

Other Officers Named.

Thomas M. McHale, also of Chicago, was elected chairman of the board of directors. Charles W. Bidwill was elected vice president and secretary. Charles Krutckoff was elected treasurer. The board of directors includes Messrs. Sabath, McHale, Bidwill, Krutckoff, and Joseph A. Murphy, widely known racing official, who, it is understood, will continue to be general manager and presiding steward of the Hawthorne meetings.

CITY LEAGUE

Lane Tech and Roosevelt continue as leaders of the north section heavyweight basketball pace in the Chicago Public High School league. They scored their third consecutive victories yesterday. Lane Tech routed Sullivan, 43 to 25, at Sullivan gymnasium, and Roosevelt jarred Waller, 52 to 25, on the Waller court.

It was Waller's first league defeat and it is now tied with Senn for third place with two victories and one defeat. Senn triumphed over Amundsen, 42 to 31, yesterday on the Amundsen floor. Stone, Hooper, forwards, and Strohm, guard, led the Senn attack.

Lake View broke into the win column in the north section for the first time by defeating Von Steuben, 26 to 17, at Von Steuben. It was Von Steuben's second league defeat. Krueger, forward, was Lake View's individual star, with five field goals.

Tuley defeated Austin, 29 to 19, in a west section game at Austin, while Fenger, led by Stromberg, triumphed over Harper, 24 to 15, at Harper in a south division contest. The lineups:

Mount Carmel, led by Kemmerling, who scored five baskets and one free throw, defeated Loyola's heavyweights, 32 to 16, for its fifth victory in the east section of the Chicago Catholic High School league at Loyola gymnasium last night. It was Loyola's third league defeat of the season.

Loyola's lightweights, however, triumphed over Mount Carmel, 31 to 29. The defeat sent Mount Carmel into second place. The sectional lead is now held by Leo's lightweights, who scored their fifth victory by defeating De La Salle, 27 to 20, on the latter's court.

STAFFORD, ARMY FOOTBALL HOPE, FAILS IN EXAMS

West Point, N. Y., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Harrison Stafford, former University of Texas football star, who would have been a regular on the United States Military academy eleven next fall, failed to pass midterm examinations. Stafford, who came here last year, left the academy today.

Stafford was one of the leading stars in the Southwest conference for two seasons. He played with the plebe team last year.

Michigan City Defeats South Bend Central, 16-11

Dates Set for Chicago Area Golf Tourneys

The tournament committee of the Chicago District Golf association and the executive committee of the Western association are not permitting the recent mild weather which has allowed hundreds of golfers to indulge in their favorite sport, to get the jump on it. Yesterday the committees met to choose sites for important district events for the 1934 season, and concluded the business by filling most of the calendar.

Recent rumors that the western open would be abandoned were killed yesterday when officials awarded the tournament to the Country club of Peoria, Ill. The tournament will be held on June 15, 16 and 17. The western amateur will be held at Twin Hills in Oklahoma City, Okla., from July 9 to 14, inclusive. The Keefe Carters, Sr. and Jr., representing Twin Hills, made a personal bid for the tournament at the December meeting of the association. No definite dates were set for the junior event, but it will be held on a Chicago course.

Amateur Qualifying Aug. 21.

Heading the district list, of course, will be the local qualifying rounds for the United States amateur and open tournaments. The Chicago sectional test for the open will be played at Olympia fields on May 14. The open proper, with Johnny Goodman of Omaha defending the title, will be decided at the Merion Cricket club near Philadelphia June 7, 8, and 9.

The qualifying round for the amateur is expected to go to Oak Park, with Aug. 21 set as the date. The United States Golf association at its annual meeting three weeks ago made radical changes in the method of holding the amateur proper, which this year will follow the British plan of match play throughout, with no qualifying play in the big show at Brookline, near Boston, from Sept. 10 to 15, inclusive.

Amateur at Medinah.

The district association's own amateur championship tournament will be held at Medinah, with the pro-amateur title being settled on the first day of the meet. The team championship, which Glen Oak has won for the last two years, was awarded to Bryn Mawr. The Pater-Filius, originated by Midlothian, will return to its source after having been conducted at other clubs for the last few years. The champion of champions event, an innovation last year, which brought all club title holders together, will be held at Bunker Hill. Glen View is a probable choice for the club relations day. One day handicap events will be played at Brookwood, Knollwood, Westmoreland, Ridgemoor, Glen Oak, Beverly, Sunset Ridge and Park Ridge.

Mishawaka Prep Quintet Defeats La Porte, 26-14

Mishawaka, Ind., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—Mishawaka handed La Porte its first defeat in a Northern Indiana High School conference basketball game tonight, 26 to 14. La Porte led, 6 to 5, at the half, but a Mishawaka rally in the third period netted the winners 15 points.

Woods and Waters

By Bob Becker

Around 4 o'clock in the afternoon is the "cocktail hour" for the big chimpanzees and Bushman, the handsome young gorilla, in the Lincoln Park zoo, according to the schedule maintained by Edgar Robinson, keeper of the monkey house, and Floyd S. Young, director of the zoo.

Visitors can see the apes do their "heavy drinking" late in the afternoon, as we did the other day. And how Bushman, the gorilla, does go for his quart bottle filled to the brim with the "Lincoln Park Special."

All the big apes are given this mixture: One quart of milk to which two eggs and a small quantity of beef extract have been added. Bushman tilts the glass bottle and drains the contents without stopping to take a breath.

The other afternoon when the gorilla was handed his drink, he was told by Mr. Robinson, his keeper and favorite "bartender," to sit down and enjoy his refreshment. Robinson took the gorilla's chair, placed it in the middle of the cage and then the young ape calmly seated himself like an adult human about to be served.

He took the milk bottle in his powerful hands, hoisted it without spilling a drop and down went the milkshake in less than a couple of seconds. Bushman held the bottle in front of his face and noticed that there was a bit of egg still on the bottom of it.

Thereupon he again lifted the bottle to his lips to get every drop of the delicious drink. Then he looked over his shoulder at his keeper just as if he were requesting another drink. But Robinson rubbed his hand over the gorilla's black head, laughed and left the cage. Bushman's daily drink [full of vitamins] had been served.

All of the chimpanzees are fond of a milkshake and get a mixture of milk, eggs and beef extract every day. However, Bushman is the only ape in the zoo who knows the demands of modern etiquette and does not break the bottle when he has finished the drink. Chillo and Billy, the powerful chimpanzees across the aisle from Bushman, are such roughnecks that they can't be trusted with anything made of glass. They get their afternoon drinks in metal containers.

Bushman, the prize pet in the monkey house, is gaining about two pounds every month, according to Mr. Young. He still is a young fellow, weighing slightly more than 100 pounds. Because he is fairly small and young he has been handled a great deal and is tame. But, as zoo officials point out, Bushman will be different when he weighs 300 or 400 pounds.

Bradley's Bazaar Hurts Leg; May Be Out of Derby

OLDE TYMERS PLAY ORIOLES.

Lacrosse Makes Debut Tomorrow on South Side

Lacrosse will be introduced to south siders tomorrow night when the new Chicago entry in the National Lacrosse league plays its opening game at Dexter Park pavilion, Pittsburgh, sharing a three way tie for the lead with Chicago and Buffalo, will be the opponent.

Officials of the league, who meet here tomorrow afternoon to award new franchises which will increase the league membership to eight teams, will witness the contest.

The new Chicago entry, which formerly represented Milwaukee, includes some of the league's leading players in its lineup, and with Pittsburgh boasting one of the smoothest working teams, an excellent demonstration of the sport is expected.

The league's leading goal tender will defend the nets for Chicago. Tillie Stokes has the lowest average of the league's goalies. Leading the attack for the Chicago team will be the leading scorer of the circuit, Chuck Davison. Rod Clarke, captain, is strong on defense and will be battling to stop the Pittsburgh attack in Chicago's attempt to gain first place.

Iowa Joe Rivers Knocks Out Neenan in 8th Round

Savoldi and Londos Point for Meeting

Jim Londos is scheduled to arrive tonight from Detroit for his heavyweight wrestling bout with Joe Savoldi at the Chicago Stadium next Wednesday. Londos met Joe Stecher last night in the last of a series of matches prior to facing Savoldi for the second time. Savoldi is due from California tomorrow. He will open training at Trafton's gymnasium Monday. Londos will do the same tomorrow.

Six bouts will comprise the boxing card Monday at Marigold Gardens. Lou Terry, St. Louis, Mo., lightweight, and Izzy Lubansky, Chicago, collide in the eight round main event. The semi-final brings together Frank Kegvil and Jack O'Connell, junior welterweights. Other matches include:

John Pacek vs. Murel Tong [4], heavyweights.
Fred Kohler vs. Al Williams [wrestling].

Tod Kelly, featherweight, opposes Joey Bozak in the principal supporting bout on the Young Geno-Paul Dazzo program at Midway arena Monday. The match is set for five rounds. Mickey McLaughlin and Harry Roberts, welterweights, will clash in a four round preliminary. An opponent for Johnny Liston, 160 pound boxer, is being sought by Johnny Coulon.

The match between Karl Ogren and Solly Dukelsky at Arcadia Gardens next Thursday is slated for eight rounds instead of ten. Ogren took a layoff yesterday. He will resume drills today as will Dukelsky, who beat Jack King last Wednesday.

Henry Rothier, welterweight, has been signed for two matches next month. On next Friday Henry boxes Jackie Purvis in a 10 rounder at Cedar Rapids, Ia., and on Feb. 7 he faces Billy Miller of Milwaukee at Milwaukee. Rothier now is under the comanagement of Eddie Stanton and Harry Shall.

Final bouts in the bantamweight, middleweight, and light heavyweight divisions of the Midwest Athletic association amateur boxing tournament will be held at the Arcadia Gardens Tuesday. The pairings:

Tony Zale vs. George Richardson, 160 pounds.
Martin Beal vs. Edward Messner, 118.

SEEDED PLAYERS WIN IN TABLE TENNIS TOURNEY

All seeded players reached the third round of the Illinois State Table Tennis championship tournament at the Hotel La Salle last night. In one of the most outstanding matches Don Wellesley, European star who is competing in his first American tournament, defeated Castle Churan.

Roy Hepshaw, Cub southpaw, forced the seeded star, Bud Klinge of Wilmette, to use everything he had in the way of tricky services and spin shots. Eventually the Cub pitcher was beaten.

Tonight the women's singles, the junior singles and remaining rounds of the men's singles will be carried to the semi-finals. Tomorrow afternoon the men's and mixed doubles and all singles semi-finals will be played.

Following the finals tomorrow evening the first showing of moving pictures of world champions and other European table tennis stars will be shown. The English Davis cup star, Fred Perry, except at the table game and is the only non-Hungarian to win a world's title.

30,000 TO SEE ALL-STARS MEET BEARS TOMORROW

Chicago Team Seeks Its Third Coast Victory.

BY GEORGE SHAFFER.
[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Los Angeles, Cal., Jan. 26.—[Special.]—With indications of a turnout of 30,000 on Sunday and almost that number of persons already trying to cut in for a fractional promoter's share of the proceeds, the Chicago Bears today wound up a week's practice for a game with an All Star coast football team at Wrigley baseball park here.

While Sunday's opposition will be the third all star coast team to be met on as many successive Sabbaths by the barnstorming champions of the National Professional Football league, names and faces of the coast gladiators will all seem strangely familiar to fans.

Met Bears Previously.

Some of Sunday's opposition played against the Bears in their first coast engagement in which the Chicago troupe conquered a Los Angeles eleven, 26 to 7, two weeks ago. Others played in the Bears' second coast game in which the Bears defeated an aggregation in San Francisco, 21 to 7, last week.

Others who since then have been signed for Sunday's game include several pro league players who rallied round in order to make the line-ups balance more evenly.

Reservations vastly exceed anything ever before sold in advance at Wrigley field. The biggest crowd that ever filed into the Stadium to see baseball was 14,800 for a night game at the height of the hot stretch pennant competition last summer.

Coach Is Optimistic.

Ray Flaherty, coaching the All Stars, today deviated from the union rules of football coaches by forecasting a mildly optimistic opinion that the strengthened coast team might beat the Bears.

"The squad at San Francisco outgained them last week," he said. "Now it is up to us to outscore 'em. I believe we can do it. The Bears have had an edge against the coast players in earlier games in being more experienced and in showing up here in mid-season physical shape after their regular season's work. We now feel that our men are equal to 60 minutes of hard driving, hard blocking, hard running football and we have had enough additional time to devise a few laterals and trick plays ourselves."

The reason for the sellout crowd which was announced by Business Manager Billy Jordan to have passed 26,000 advance reservations today was the exciting spectacle furnished by the Bears with Red Grange's 77 yard touchdown run in the second game and Battles' 55 yard touchdown run supplemented by sensational double and triple forward laterals while the Bears were winning their previous start here, 26 to 7.

BLACKHAWKS SET LEAGUE MARK FOR OVERTIME GAMES

Battle Toronto Tomorrow at Stadium.

When the Blackhawks chalked up a victory over the Canadiens at the Stadium Thursday night they established a new league record for successive overtime games. The last three played went into the extra period.

On Jan. 20 they went to a 2-2 tie with the Maple Leafs at Toronto; the following night to another 2-2 draw against the Montreal Maroons, and Thursday in overtime they defeated the Canadiens by a 2-1 count. The last two games were played at the Stadium.

Drills New Line.

The Hawk boss figures the Maple Leafs will defeat the Detroit Red Wings at Toronto tonight. In that event a victory over the league leading Leafs, with whom they clash at the Stadium tomorrow night, will enable the Hawks to pass the Red Wings, who at present are in second place, one point ahead of the Chicago team.

Gottselig Not in Uniform.

Johnny Gottselig, the slender left winger of the Hawks and the team's leading point maker, did not don his uniform for yesterday's practice. Johnny was the recipient of a much too robust board check by Marty Burke, defense man of the Canadiens, and because his right knee was slightly swollen, Manager Gorman excused him for the day.

Down in the dressing room Gottselig smiled when reminded of the incident. "Bumps are part of the game," said Johnny, "sometimes they prove disastrous but they have their good qualities also. In this particular case, I'm tickled Burke lost his head and gave me the rush. He was sent to the penalty box. With the Canadiens a man short in the overtime period, our team went after a goal and got it."

Cleveland and North Shore Play Tonight

Two games that promise to rank among the fastest of the Metropolitan Indoor Polo league season will be played tonight at the 124th field artillery arena, Cottage Grove avenue and 52d street.

In the opener the Chicago Riding club will face Fort Sheridan with expectations that their revamped lineup will carry them through to a championship. The change in the riding club's battle front will bring Dave Silberman, hard hitting star, into action, with John C. Bowers, team captain, and the flashy Bud Collins as his mates.

In the main event of the evening last year's national champions, Jim Hannah, Herb Lorber, and Frank Bering, riding under the North Shore Polo and Hunt club colors, against the Cleveland Riding club trio, which also won high honors in its class at the national championships in 1933 at the big artillery armory.

Arriving here this morning, their mounts having preceded them yesterday, the Cleveland team of Bill Fergus, Hank Evinger and Maj. Ollie Gaites will take a light workout at the armory. Tonight's lineups:

REVEAL DETROIT BANKERS FAILED TO REPAY LOANS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—With representatives of the department of justice and lawyers for the bankers following every detail of the evidence, the senate committee on banking and currency disclosed today new and grave charges seriously reflecting on the banking integrity of men who for years have been listed among Detroit's leading bankers.

The evidence was largely based on the confidential files of the Detroit Bankers' company, the widely branched $800,000,000 institution which from January, 1930, until February of last year was in control of more than 60 per cent of all the banking resources in the metropolitan area of Detroit.

Practices Questionable.

The committee produced a confidential report dated May 18, 1932, which Joseph Y. Verhelle, who was controlled of the Detroit Banking company, had been asked to make with reference to transactions involving various officers of the Wayne First National unit of the banking structure. The practices disclosed by the report were described by Verhelle as "those which appeared questionable from an ethical standpoint."

Ferdinand Pecora, committee counsel, began an inquiry into "unethical practices." The first concerned John R. Bodde, vice chairman of the board. This was "an improperly secured note of $20,000 endorsed by Bodde and approved by Donald H. Sweeny, president. The full collateral behind the note was estimated to be worth $7,950.

Reported Uncollectible.

"This note," the report said, "although approved by the executive committee, should have been known to have been uncollectible by the officers recommending it."

The next item involved Sweeney. He, the report stated, had twenty-one mortgages as "his own direct obligations," all of them in arrears as to principal payments. The value of the mortgages was given as $23,640. In addition, the report said, Sweeney was liable with Vice President Moody on a mortgage in the amount of $30,000.

The investigation disclosed that mortgages totaling $1,100,000 involving either officers or employes of the bank, and that "but few principal payments" had been made on any of 115 mortgages.

FIRST FEDERAL SAVINGS & LOAN ASSN. ORGANIZED

Formal organization of the First Federal Savings and Loan association of Chicago was completed yesterday. At a meeting of the initial share subscribers held in the Monroe building, the following board of directors was elected: Fred W. Sargent, Alfred K. Stern, Graham Aldis, J. Frank Grimes, Willoughby G. Walling, Henry Scarborough Jr., T. A. Lowery, Morton Bodfish, George P. Ellis, H. O. Walther, A. D. Theobald and Miss Constance M. Wright.

The directors announced that the new institution will open offices on Feb. 1 on the fourth floor at 105 West Madison street. It is chartered under federal laws. It will be under the regulation and supervision of the United States government and of the Federal Home Loan bank of Chicago.

COTTON TRADING DRAGS; ALL MARKETS DECLINE

Cotton buying was lacking yesterday, and the result was a dragging market that ran into selling pressure on the hard spots. Selling by Wall street had a depressing influence, and closing trades were at the lowest prices of the day.

At the close futures in Chicago were 7 to 15 points net lower, at other markets 8 to 13 points net lower. Spots in New York lost 10 points to 11.35 cents, while New Orleans, Galveston, and Houston dropped 10 points to the 11.00 cents level. Liverpool closed 7 points net higher.

Spinners' takings for the week are 256,000 bales, compared with 243,000 bales for the previous week. The intosight movement is 150,000 bales, against 141,000 bales for the previous week. Prices:

SUGAR.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Raw sugar was quiet today and prices were unchanged, with buyers and sellers still apart. The former seemed willing to pay 3.20c, while holders of duty frees, which were the only sugars offered, were asking 3.25c. Final prices on futures were 1 to 3 points net higher, with near months showing the maximum upturns. Sales were 10,950 tons. Prices follow:

STOCKS ACTIVE, BUT PRICES TEND TO LOWER LEVEL

Several Groups Pushed Without Effect.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Jan. 26.—Aviation, automobile accessory, railroad, and specialty stocks contributed the bulk of activity in today's trading session on the stock exchange. Prices moved haphazardly and the market in general appeared a bit tired in consequence of its exertions on the upside during the week. The finish was an irregular affair, week-end evening up of trading accounts making modest inroads into recent gains. Most of the group leaders wound up behind modest minus signs. Trading held up well, however, turnover being over 2,500,000 shares.

Pool activity was in evidence at intervals of the session. The professional market makers were "all around the list," starting with the motor accessories, switching to the rubbers, later to the steel, and finally to the rails without being able to get anywhere.

Worry Over Gold Bill.

News was once more scarce and of little account. Some concern was manifest over the senate fight over President Roosevelt's gold measure and brokers said that the development was probably having a tendency to arrest speculative operations in stocks for the time being.

A feature of the dealings was a spectacular rise in Wright Aeronautical, the issue jumping more than 19 points to the best price in four years. This socalled "inactive," a speculative favorite of another day, hit 49⅞ as compared with its 1933 low of 6 as traders bid in ten-share lots of the stock in rapid succession. Other aviation issues also showed some spirit.

Refrigerator Stocks Liked.

Refrigerator stocks were given a whirl in the late trading and Kelvinator and Servel approximated their 1933-'34 highs on modest gains.

Another issue to come in for unusual activity was American Tobacco B which ran to new high levels for the move as long strings of shares changed hands.

Among the food and allied stocks with liquor leanings to advance were Standard Brands and Corn Products. Allied Chemical made a new high and Shell Union skyrocketed for some 11 points, but had to surrender about half its newly won ground.

Nash was a leader among the motors. Automobile accessory issues were buoyant at intervals.

RUBBER.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Crude rubber futures closed steady, 2.35 points higher. January, 10.10c nominal; March, 10.23@10.25c; May, 10.50@10.52c; July, 10.72@10.73c. Smoked ribbed spot closed 10.13c nominal.

Remington Rand, Inc.

Investors' Guide: I shall appreciate any information you may give me pertaining to Remington Rand stock.—H. A. C.

Answer: Remington Rand, Inc., is one of the largest manufacturers of office appliances in the world. The bulk of revenues comes from the sale of Remington typewriter and filing equipment. Other products are accounting machines and equipment and office furniture.

Foreign business usually accounts for about one-third of revenues. The vastly enlarged scope of governmental activities has made the federal government an important customer.

Selling "tools of business" as this company does, sales are highly dependent on business activity. With the pickup in business last June operations were placed on a profitable basis for the first time in two and a half years. Sales have since increased steadily. In November production of typewriters was running 5,000 a month behind orders.

Preliminary reports for October and November, 1933, indicated a profit greater than that for the entire quarter ended Sept. 30. November, instead of showing the usual 4 per cent decline from October, increased.

For the 6 months to Sept. 30, 1933 net sales were $11,540,000 and net profit was $110,000, or 20 per cent of first preferred dividends. For the corresponding 1932 period sales were $10,937,000 and loss $1,302,000.

The four year record of earnings follows:

Yr. Ended March 31.	Sales.	Net Inc.	Com Shr. Inc. per
1933	$22,484,000	*$2,581,000	*$2.97
1932	32,247,000	* 3,036,000	* 3.32
1931	47,399,000	1,411,000	11
1930	64,181,000	6,041,000	3.51

*Loss.

The company disclosed a healthy current position on March 31, 1933. Current assets, including cash assets of more than $6,000,000, totaled $21,296,000, and current liabilities were $1,847,000.

Funded debt, due 1947, totaled $18,090,000. There were outstanding 156,950 shares of 7 per cent cumulative $100 par first preferred, 18,554 shares of $100 par 8 per cent cumulative second preferred, and 1,290,987 shares of $1 par common. Nothing has been paid on either class of preferred since Oct. 1, 1931. According to the bond indenture, earned surplus must exceed $183,000 before dividends can be paid. As of March 31, 1933, profit and loss deficit amounted to $2,591,000.

HERCULES FIRM WILL REINSURE NATIONAL LIFE

Sears-Roebuck Bid Wins Contract.

BY PHILIP HAMPSON.

The Hercules Life Insurance company, organized by Sears, Roebuck & Co. interests, yesterday was awarded the contract for the reinsurance of the policyholders of the National Life Insurance Company of the U. S. A. by Judge William J. Lindsay of the Superior court. Selection of the Hercules company retains in Chicago the business of National Life, which was placed in receivership on Oct. 17, 1933.

COL. G. E. HUMPHREY. [Kaufmann & Fabry Photo.]

The court was packed with representatives of insurance companies and other interested persons when Judge Lindsay announced his decision. Ernest Palmer, director of insurance, and Otto Kerner, attorney general, were in court as representatives of the state of Illinois.

Eight Bids Submitted.

Receiver Patrick J. Lucey had submitted to the court eight bids for the reinsurance of National Life policyholders, including three from outside the state. It was stated that the choice finally narrowed down to three Chicago groups, Continental Assurance company, Washington National Insurance company and Hercules.

Judge Lindsay, in announcing his decision, said, "The contract for reinsurance submitted by this company guarantees the absolute payment of the policies in their entire sums. The court further believes that the Hercules company will operate as economically as any."

Gilbert E. Humphreys, president and treasurer of Hercules, said preliminary legal steps toward the formation of Hercules Life have already been taken and the organization of the company will be completed within a few days. It will have a capital of $500,000 and a surplus of $500,000, all of which will be paid in cash. Mr. Humphreys is vice president of Sears-Roebuck, in charge of factories and outside investments.

Agents Are Protected.

The Hercules arrangement protects the agents of National Life, who will be used to conserve the business now on the company's books. It was also intimated that a portion of the staff of National Life would be retained.

Attorney Herbert M. Lautmann, counsel for the Hercules company, explained that the plan of the contract will provide for the appointment of two trustees for the old National Life company. One of the trustees will be appointed by Judge Lindsay and the other will be named by the new company.

These trustees must agree upon the price to be obtained through the sale of any of the assets of National Life before they are placed on the market. He added that the reason for this is to avoid "sacrifice sales" of the company's assets, thus jeopardizing the policy holders' interests.

Lucey Submits Report.

Receiver Lucey in a supplemental report to Judge Lindsay on the affairs of National Life during the period Oct. 17, 1933, to Jan. 18, 1934, said that he had received $791,510 in cash when he took over the affairs of the company. During this time he took in $1,133,348, making a total of $1,924,858.

During the period of his receivership he paid out $381,673, leaving a cash balance of $1,543,185. Disbursements included: clerk hire, $50,000; legal expense, $10,110; office expense, $18,661; mortgage loan expense, $67,616; real estate expense, $1,646; taxes, $111,988, and miscellaneous receiver's expense, $15,179.

Among the liabilities as of Jan. 18, 1934, he said, was $1,118,827 to the Reconstruction Finance corporation. RFC loans, he said, are adequately secured.

Officials of Hercules Life are Lessing J. Rosenwald, chairman of the board of Sears, Roebuck & Co., chairman; Gilbert E. Humphrey, president and treasurer; Carl L. Odell, vice president and general manager, and W. N. Lowe, secretary. The board of directors includes Mr. Rosenwald, Mr. Humphrey, who is president of the Allstate Insurance company and the Allstate Fire Insurance company; Mr. Odell, vice president of the Allstate companies; Gen. Robert E. Wood, E. J. Pollock, John M. Hancock, H. Wendell Endicott, J. M. Barker, and Hugo Sonnenschein.

Car Loadings Rise Despite Predicted Loss

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Jan. 26.—Contrary to predictions of a small decrease in car loadings for last week, compared with the preceding period, the actual figures released today by the American Railway association indicated a rise of 4,803 cars. The increase equaled 0.9 per cent.

The country's railroads moved a total of 560,430 revenue freight cars last week, compared with 555,627 the week before and 499,554 in the corresponding period a year ago. The gain over a year ago amounted to 60,876 cars.

A decline in coal traffic of more than 18,000 cars from the week ended Jan. 13, 1934, offset in a measure the increases shown in all other divisions. The movement of miscellaneous freight rose 6,455 cars over the previous period and 31,924 over the corresponding interval of last year.

12.2 Per Cent Above Year Ago.

Carloadings for the week ended Jan. 20 were 12.2 per cent over corresponding week of 1933. For the week ended Jan. 13 the total was 11.1 per cent over preceding week and 8.9 per cent above corresponding week of 1932.

Less-than-carlot merchandise loadings were 160,499, an increase of 2,169 from the preceding week, and 257 from a year ago; grain and grain products, 32,092, increase 3,533 and 5,418; forest products, 19,647, increase 1,501 and 4,808; ore, 3,202, a decrease of 16 cars below the preceding week, but 904 higher than 1933; coal, 126,880, a decrease of 10,156 below the preceding week, but 14,241 higher than 1933; coke, 8,342, increase 1,047 and 2,945, and live stock, 18,057, increase 270 and 379.

Freight loaded during the first three weeks of January totaled 1,615,996 cars, compared with 1,448,916 in 1933 and 1,706,428 in 1932.

CROP CONTROL BY COMPULSION URGED ON U. S.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—Crop control by compulsion loomed definitely today as the next step in the Roosevelt administration's effort to regulate farm production.

Under the urging of southern members of congress, the President and Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace were weighing the suggestion that farmers be forced to keep their plantings within limits dictated by the agricultural administration.

The President, at his regular press conference, disclosed that he believes the present voluntary contract plan of obtaining coöperation with the AAA acreage reduction program will eventually have to give way to a more rigid method.

Enactment Uncertain.

Whether legislation to achieve this end will be passed at this session, he would not say on the ground that it is still too early to tell whether it will be necessary.

Secretary Wallace dispatched questionnaires to 50,000 cotton planters throughout the south asking their opinion as to the need for a compulsory system of control, and suggesting three alternative methods of compulsion.

Officials of the AAA denied that the need for a forcible method of effecting acreage reduction was demonstrated by the failure of last year's cotton curtailment campaign. From a financial standpoint, at least, the cotton program is regarded as a success, not only by the AAA but by the cotton planters who received 111 million dollars in cash benefit payments and 48 millions on option contracts.

AAA Feels Limitation.

But the AAA is approaching its 1934 cotton campaign with some lack of confidence in the voluntary system because it gives the government no control over new lands which may be brought into cotton production, and does not prevent farmers who agree to take certain acres out of production, from enlarging the crop on those acres retained.

The alternative methods of compulsory control, now being considered by the administration, are licensing of all farmers, the imposition of a confiscatory tax on cotton ginnings over a given amount, and the licensing of cotton ginners.

GERMAN PARLEY ON PAYING DEBTS IS DEADLOCKED

BERLIN, Jan. 26.—(AP)—A deadlock in efforts of foreign creditors' representatives to increase the amount of interest and amortization payments that Germany permits to be transferred abroad developed today through the inability of the German foreign office and Reichsbank officials to agree. It was considered likely that negotiations would be abandoned tomorrow.

Representatives of American, British, and Swiss creditors took the view that Germany can transfer more than the 30 per cent cash quota provided in a moratorium announced last December. They were supported by the German foreign office as a matter of foreign policy. Opposing this theory—on the grounds of internal financial policies—are Reichsbank officials, who reiterated that Germany could pay no more than 30 per cent in cash and 70 per cent in scrip on the amounts due creditors abroad.

Report on Stock Market Control Sent to Roosevelt

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—A bulky report on stock exchange practices written by an interdepartmental committee at the instruction of President Roosevelt was sent by him to the banking and currency committees of the house and senate today, after another official reiteration that the report does not constitute an administration program. Senator Fletcher and Representative Steagall, chairmen of the respective committees, held the reports in confidence.

EXPORTS SWING UP, HELPED BY CHEAP DOLLAR

First Foreign Trade Gain Since 1929.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—December exports increased in value by about $8,000,000 over November to a total of $192,000,000, while imports jumped by about $4,500,000 to $133,000,000, giving a favorable balance for the month of $59,000,000, the commerce department announced today.

This brought the year's foreign shipments to $1,675,020,000, compared with $1,611,016,000 for 1932 and $2,424,289,000 for 1931. Imports for 1933 likewise increased, totaling $1,448,990,000, compared with $1,322,774,000 for 1933 and $2,090,735,000 for 1931.

Besides yielding a favorable balance amounting to $226,030,000, United States foreign trade for 1933 marked the first occasion since the beginning of the decline in 1929 that a year's exports have exceeded those for the preceding twelve months. The favorable balance compared with one of $288,242,000 for 1932.

December Gains Against Trend.

December trade, registering gains of 4 per cent over November in both exports and imports, continued contrary to the usual seasonal influences. The unexpected gain in imports during the month was attributed by the department to heavy liquor imports, which reached more than $10,000,000.

"In the first six months of 1933," the department said, "the value of exports was 20.3 per cent smaller than in the corresponding period of 1932, and the decline in imports between these two periods was 20.7 per cent.

"The situation was completely reversed in the second half of 1933. In that period exports were valued at 30.4 per cent more than in the last six months of 1932 and imports at 48.8 per cent more. Between the first and last half of 1933 the value of exports advanced 50.3 per cent and the value of imports 44.8 per cent, only partly explainable on seasonable grounds."

Cheaper Dollar Aids Trade.

The rising level of business activity here and abroad and depreciation in dollar exchange was held largely responsible for the expansion of foreign trade from the low level of the first quarter of the year. As to the effect of dollar depreciation in the period from April to August, 1933, the department said:

"Although the decline in dollar exchange lowered American commodities in price to foreign buyers, there was some tendency for buyers to withhold purchases in the expectation of still lower dollar prices, and some reluctance to sell on the part of the United States government, in view of exchange uncertainties.

"A second phase of the relation of exchange values to foreign trade became apparent in the closing months of the year, when the rate of exchange depreciation was slackening and there was a tendency toward more stable exchange.

Exports Up, Imports Retarded.

"From August to November the seasonally adjusted index of export values tended upward while the seasonally adjusted index of import values declined 20 per cent. This trend continued in December. The export index advanced 14 per cent in December, while the seasonally adjusted index of import commodities, exclusive of spirits and wines, declined 4 per cent.

"Thus the statistics of trade seem to indicate that for the time being, at least, the lower value of the dollar exchange, which has resulted in lower prices to foreign purchasers, is having a tendency toward improving sale of United States merchandise abroad. Also by reason of the additional number of dollars needed to purchase foreign goods, the lower exchange value of the dollar is acting to retard importations."

F. A. Vanderlip to Discuss Roosevelt Policies Here

Frank A. Vanderlip, former president of the National City bank of New York, will discuss "President Roosevelt's Monetary Policies and a Program for a Permanent Federal Monetary Authority" next Monday evening at the Union League club before a group of leading Chicagoans interested in currency and banking developments at Washington.

Gold Bought to Ease Dollar Starts to U. S.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

New York, Jan. 26.—The treasury today began bringing home gold which it has acquired recently in attempting to hold the dollar down. Cable reports from Paris gave the amount of the initial shipment as 80,000,000 French francs, or, at par of exchange, $3,136,000. All the gold, according to the reports from Paris, was placed on the United States liner President Roosevelt at Havre. The shipper was the Banque de France and the consignee the Federal Reserve bank of New York.

In Paris information about the shipment apparently was freely available. Here there was an effort to shroud the whole subject in secrecy. The Federal Reserve bank officials would not discuss the subject or even admit that there was any gold coming to the bank from France.

Admits "Swap" of Gold.

However, the bank announced that $5,162,700 gold held here under earmark for foreign account had been released, but not shipped abroad. Wall street interpreted the transaction as reflecting a "swap" between the Central bank here and the Bank of England or the Bank of France whereby gold held abroad by the reserve bank was turned over to one of these institutions in exchange for the release of a corresponding amount of the gold earmarked here.

The consignment from France indicates, Wall street authorities say, that United States government gold buying in Paris has been larger in volume than supposed. Taking account of the $131,000,000 gold acquired by the Reconstruction Finance corporation before the treasury began dealing directly through the federal reserve banks, it appears that already something like $250,000,000 gold has been bought. Large amounts also have been purchased in London.

Dollar Value Increases.

American money returning from Europe and European capital coming here for investment in securities are believed to have been the causes of another decline in sterling and francs and a rise of the gold value of the dollar in today's exchange markets.

In gold francs, the dollar closed at 63.03 cents, against 62.99 yesterday.

The pound declined to the lowest mark since Nov. 6, when it touched $4.88¼. Later it rallied and closed at $4.96. The franc sagged, but also rallied to 6.215 cents, against 6.22 yesterday.

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—A fund of $7,500 for continuing the congressional investigation of receivership cases in the federal courts at Chicago was approved today by the house appropriations committee.

A resolution authorizing the appropriation is expected to meet with early approval on the floor of the house and the judiciary subcommittee which is conducting the inquiry plans to go to Chicago to hold hearings early next month.

The investigation, according to Chairman Thomas McKeown [Dem., Okla.] of the subcommittee, will not be directed at the conduct of individual judges in Chicago, although their handling of receiverships will be looked into incidentally. The purpose of the committee, said Mr. McKeown, is to investigate all ramifications of the receivership situation starting at the beginning of each case about which complaints have been heard. He said his group had been granted permission to extend the time of making its report from Jan. 31 to June 30.

The chairman would not disclose the cases which he intends to include in the inquiry, but it was understood that the traction company case will be one of them. He declined also to reveal the names of judges against whom specific complaints are reported to have been made.

U. S. MAY ADOPT NEW METHOD TO GET 9 BILLIONS

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr. today refused to concede that the treasury, which still must secure 9 billion dollars in five months, will raise this money entirely by "orthodox" financing methods.

The refusal came shortly before he announced that the billion dollar security issues, which the treasury sold Wednesday, had been oversubscribed almost five times. Bids aggregating 4 billion 770 million dollars were received by the treasury, which was seeking to borrow only a billion.

Admitting that he considered this borrowing operation an amazing success, Secretary Morgenthau still would not declare that the treasury will raise all the rest of its 9 billion dollars through equally "orthodox" financing methods. He turned questions on the treasury's future financing plans aside with a joke.

Currency Issues Rumored.

There have been reports that the treasury will issue up to 3 billion dollars' worth of currency to pay off some of its maturing obligations, and that, instead of borrowing money to pay its bills, it will use the profit accruing from the gold "profit" after dollar devaluation. Neither of these steps would be considered "orthodox."

Most of Secretary Morgenthau's hesitancy over committing himself on future treasury financing operations is said to be due not to any decision on his part to resort to either of these two inflationary steps, but to the fact that he considers the market for government securities uncertain.

Being susceptible of quick changes, the condition of the market at any time may force the treasury to resort to other than "orthodox" financing methods, he is reported to feel. Either printing money or use of the gold "profit" would considerably relieve the treasury's borrowing needs.

Announces Loan Allottments.

In the formal announcement on the treasury's billion dollar borrowing of Wednesday, Secretary Morgenthau said:

"Reports received from the federal reserve banks show that for the offering of 2½ per cent notes, which was for 500 million dollars, or thereabouts, total subscriptions aggregated over $3,415,000,000. Subscriptions in amounts up to and including $10,000 were allotted in full and all other subscriptions were allotted 14 per cent, but not less than $10,000 on any one subscription.

"For the offering of 1½ per cent certificates, which was for a like amount of 500 million dollars, or thereabouts, total subscriptions aggregated over $1,355,000,000. Subscriptions in amounts up to and including $10,000 were allotted in full, and all other subscriptions were allotted 38 per cent, but not less than $10,000 on any one subscription.

RECOMMEND U. S. RULE ON MERGER WIRE SERVICES

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—(AP)—Chairman Dill of the senate interstate commerce committee told newspaper men today the communications report of Secretary Roper's committee sent to congress today unanimously recommended a federal commission to regulate all communications and that a majority of the committee favored a merger of all communication facilities under government control.

The report, forwarded to the senate and house interstate commerce committees by President Roosevelt for their information in framing legislation, was withheld from publication until Dill could present it formally to the senate.

PACKER VICTOR

Packers Urge Market Pact; Deny Charges

[Chicago Tribune Press Service.]

Washington, D. C., Jan. 26.—Denying charges made by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace that the packers have refused to coöperate in government relief efforts, Thomas E. Wilson, president of the Wilson Packing company, Chicago, today told the house committee on agriculture that the packing industry is anxious to sign a marketing agreement with the farm adjustment administration.

Mr. Wilson's statement prefaced by several days a peace meet set for next Monday at which Secretary Wallace and members of the industry will seek to reach a new basis of negotiations regarding the proposed packers' agreement. Mr. Wallace suspended all efforts to formulate a pact for the industry several days ago, asserting that the packers' bids for processing government relief pork were unsatisfactory and disappointing.

Urges Marketing Agreement.

Wilson told the house committee he believed a marketing agreement for the industry would be helpful not only to the producers of livestock, but to the packers themselves. It would provide an orderly system of marketing, he said, and correct numerous competitive evils now existing in the packing business.

Mr. Wilson did not deny that the packers have taken the federal processing tax on hogs out of the price paid to the hog producers.

"It is true," he said, "that hog prices have not advanced sufficiently to offset the amount of the processing tax; this because the industry has been unable to persuade consumers of pork produces to pay higher prices.

Cites Bonus to Farmers.

"While the processing tax has been, of course, a direct factor in current prices, it should not be overlooked that from funds derived from the tax the farmer will receive in addition to the current price for hogs a benefit payment from the government if he agrees to reduce corn-hog production and that if efforts to reduce the supply are successful hog prices should be affected accordingly."

Wilson told the committee that after the 50 per cent increase comes in the hog processing tax next month, raising it to $2.25 a hundred on top weights, it would mean 4.8 cents a pound more on the price of pork loins, for instance, or an increase of almost 50 per cent.

"The packing industry has coöperated whenever it has been possible to do so," he said. "It has not opposed any phase of the present recovery program or the agricultural adjustment program."

F. H. PRINCE WINS FINANCE POST OF ARMOUR & CO.

St. Louis Opponent Elected Director.

BY THOMAS FURLONG.

Frederick H. Prince, 75 year old Boston financier, yesterday became the finance committee chairman of Armour & Co. His election followed a stormy meeting of stockholders where he and three of his associates were picked as directors of the company.

Prince joined with the management group headed by A. Watson Armour, a director, and President T. G. Lee to elect a new board, and the result gave them a clear cut majority in the new directors' slate. Their victory came, however, only after they conceded two places on the new board to Chase Ulman, St. Louis capitalist, who had campaigned against Prince's election.

Ulman Wins Two Places.

Ulman and his attorney, S. Mayners Wallace, also of St. Louis, were given two places on the official ticket, and two of the regular nominees were dropped when it became clear they had sufficient proxies to prove a real obstruction.

Prince is credited with controlling 5 per cent of the outstanding stock of the company, which is held by more than 45,000 persons.

In addition to his post as chairman Prince got two other places on the finance committee elected at a meeting of the new directors late yesterday. The board also voted that members would receive no salaries for serving on the finance committee, which is really the executive committee. Until a few months ago three members of the committee drew aggregate annual salaries of $140,000. All present officers, including President Lee, were reëlected.

Stockholders Clash.

The directors met late yesterday afternoon. The earlier stockholders' meeting, held in the company's plant gymnasium at the Union Stockyards, was enlivened by sharp clashes between various stockholders' groups. The meeting began at 10 a. m., and it was not until three and a half hours later that the compromise ticket was agreed upon.

In all, eight new directors were chosen. Besides Ulman, Wallace, and Prince, they are:

Philip D. Armour, grandson and namesake of the company's founder, who quit as first vice president and director of the company two years ago; Lester Armour, brother of Philip D. and a former officer of the company; Weymouth Kirkland, Chicago attorney and counsel for the Prince stockholders' committee; James A. McDonough, a trustee of the Central Manufacturing district, of which Prince is the principal owner; Elisha Walker, partner of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., New York investment bankers, and a close associate of Prince.

Those Dropped from Ticket.

Frank G. Allen, president of an Armour subsidiary, and I. M. Hoagland, sales manager of the company, were dropped from the "official" ticket to make room for Ulman and his counsel.

The two members of the Armour family added to the board represent large holdings in their own right and were agreed upon at a recent conference with the management and the Prince representatives. Prince was a long time friend of the late J. Ogden Armour and his father, P. D. Armour, founder of the company. Philip and Lester are grandsons of P. D.

Retiring directors who were reëlected are: A. Watson Armour, Laurance H. Armour, Sewell L. Avery, Henry W. Boyd, D. A. Crawford, Charles F. Curtiss, Charles J. Faulkner Jr., James R. Leavell, T. G. Lee, D. R. McLen-nan, Arthur Meeker, Harry G. Mills, and Philip L. Reed.

Conspicuous absentees on the new board are Albert H. Wiggin and Samuel H. McRoberts, New York bankers, and Arthur Reynolds, former Chicago banker, who as the three key members of the Armour finance committee dominated the company's affairs for nearly a decade. Wiggin and Reynolds retired from the board several weeks ago, and McRoberts' name was not submitted for reelection. Until a few months ago McRoberts held the $60,000 a year post of finance chairman.

Session Marked by Clashes.

The meeting was marked by numerous sharp verbal exchanges between various minority stockholder groups, some of whom were supporting and some opposing the management's program. On several occasions the chair occupied by President Lee, who made the target of comment from the floor. At times he had difficulty in maintaining order.

Insistent demands were made that the salaries of the principal officers be made public at the meeting. This President Lee declined to do, but stated that he would give the information to those stockholders who came to the company's offices.

"May I ask, then," said one woman stockholder, who used a broad "a," "if you refuse to give us that information."

"I merely ask your indulgence," Lee replied, "that you wait until after the meeting and come to the office to get the information which is available to stockholders who want it."

Stockholder Wants "Dough."

A few minutes later a stockholder in a back row yelled, "What we want is some 'dough' out of this company and not a lot of talk like this."

President Lee explained at some length the failure of the company to pay a preferred dividend last year despite the fact that earnings covered such a payment. He explained that there was a legal question whether such action would be a violation of the Illinois corporation act, as net assets of the company are probably not equal to stated capital. Payment under such a condition is illegal under the act. A capital readjustment to correct this situation and take the place of the program turned down last year will be formulated as soon as possible, he said.

Committee in Control.

A. Watson Armour, chairman of the official proxy committee, told the stockholders he represented 2,800,000 shares, or more than a majority of the 4,572,000 outstanding shares eligible to vote. Ulman said he represented "mostly himself," but did not announce the number of proxies he held.

Earlier Ulman had exhibited a suit-case full of proxies including his own and those given him by other stockholders. He at first declined to turn the proxies over to the secretary for checking. Later the chair named a teller to represent Ulman and the work of checking the proxies went ahead.

After 30 minutes of backroom conferences between officials and Ulman and his attorneys, it was announced that a slate agreeable to both sides had been agreed upon. This gave Ulman his two places on the board and renamed the remainder of the official ticket.

HOGS REBOUND TO BEST LEVELS OF TWO MONTHS

Average Rises 20 Cents; Cattle Also Firmer.

Hog prices yesterday made a sharp rebound, rising from 10 to 40 cents in the various classes with top sales at the finish on a par with the highest marks in the trade in the last two months.

Tops were up 25 cents at $3.75 and the average at $3.50 indicated a 20 cent advance. This was one of the sharpest gains of the winter. After directs had been deducted from yesterday's receipts only about 14,000 of the fresh receipts remained to be sold.

Light Hogs in Demand.

Small local packers, eastern representatives and federal buyers were in active competition in the better grades of light and light butchers. Light lights, which have been a drag on prices for several days, scored the sharpest rise.

Commission men are warning the country that, while federal buyers are taking a rather large proportion of the top grades of light butchers, buying for this account in the underweights is not broad enough to take care of even a normal supply of hogs weighing under 150 pounds.

While hogs weighing from 100 to 200 pounds are being bought for relief, only a very small share of purchases at Chicago to date have been in the lighter weights.

Cattle in Better Demand.

The cattle trade yesterday was benefited by the slightly better demand for beef and the encouraging reports from the hide market. Sellers managed to halt the break in prices, but quotations still are sharply lower than the recent high spot and much below the closing level of last week.

No cattle in yesterday's receipts were good enough to sell above $5.85, while the bulk of the crop on hand cashed at $4 to $5.50. Some salesmen locked up good steers on the strength of the better action yesterday, hoping to recover some of the 25 to 60 cent losses recorded in the last three or four days.

Lamb prices lost about 10 cents yesterday, but demand was brisk at the slightly lower rates. All interests were aggressive in wooled lambs around the $9 line, with tops to city butchers up to $9.10.

ADVANCE IN HOGS SPURS LARD TRADE; PRICES RISE

An advance of 10 to 40 cents in hogs stimulated buying of lard and bellies yesterday. At the close prices of lard futures were unchanged for January and 12½ to 17½ cents higher on the more deferred months. Cash lard received more attention. Regular advanced 10 cents to $5.40; loose, 17½ cents to $4.65, and leaf, 12½ cents to $4.62½. Liverpool lard was higher.

Bellies were unchanged for January and 7½ cents higher for May, while cash lots were unchanged at $6.50.

WOOL MARKETS

BOSTON, Mass. — Attempts to "jiggle" wool prices were charged today by wool traders against buyers whom they said had persistently sought lower values during the week. The situation was such that it was difficult to receive concessions and equally hard for sellers to secure advances, which were asked consistently.

LONDON WOOL.

LONDON, Jan. 26.—(AP)—WOOL—Offerings at the wool auction today amounted to 11,170 bales, of which 8,863 were sold. The moderate selection met with keen competition and a steady sale at current rates. Withdrawals were frequent among medium and coarse grades owing to high limits.

COTTONSEED OIL.

NEW YORK, Jan. 26.—(AP)—Bleachable cottonseed oil was firm today on covering and commission house buying, which was influenced by news from Washington that the house ways and means committee had approved a bill for a 5 cent per pound excise tax on cocoanut and sesame oils. Firmness of lard and hogs was also a factor and offset the lower cotton market. Final prices were 2 to 5 points net higher. Sales were 38 contracts. Bleachable spot nominal: January closed 4.65c; March, 4.76c; May, 4.98c; July, 5.16c.

Seven pictures of the kidnap victim as he appeared on the witness stand yesterday in the court of Judge Michael Feinberg, where Roger Touhy, Gus Schaefer, Albert Kator, and Edward McFadden are on trial, with the state demanding the death penalty. Factor stepped from the stand to positively identify Touhy, Schaefer, and Kator as members of the gang which held him captive. McFadden was not mentioned in his testimony. The testimony was the high point of the state's case, and the witness held the close attention of the jury and the spectators. He related the story of his abduction after roadhouse party, his twelve days as a captive, and his release after ransom was paid. [TRIBUNE Photos.] (Story on page 1.)
